Time-out Watch 3. Stop Watch 4. Tachometer 5. 12 Hour Register 6. 30 Minute Register 7. 60 Second Timer 8. Degreemeter 9. Bezelometer. The original 1940'S Bezelometer 950-960 was designed for pilots. All aviation experts knew the Bezelometer was essentially a cockpit instrument for the wrist. Two features incorporated in the design give clear evidence of this intent. The bezel on the case is an independent chapter ring graduated in counter clockwise hours. Rotating the ring to align the mission duration hours with the hour hand on the dial at takeoff gives the pilot a quick reference of the flight time remaining during any point in the mission. Never seen on any aviation timer, Jardur engineers decided to design and place on the dial a red Degreemeter scale. This scale is represented by the spiral division marked in degrees. For timing aviation turns this scale is very valuable and is calculated on the standard rate turn of 180 degrees in two minutes. The scale is plainly marked up to 180 degrees for a 15 degree turn every five seconds covering the complete revolution of the sweep hand in one minute. The 30 minute register has first two minutes marked in red which enables the Pilot to tell immediately when the sweep second hand has made two complete revolutions and the 360 degree turn has been completed. In order to accomplish these standard rate turns, a certain needle deflection is maintained on the turn and bank indicator, which is for the length of time required to make the turn through the number of degrees desired

One of the scions of the New Mexican Expressionist movements, Rafael Coronel's paintings are known for their expressive and evocative atmosphere and his use of the great masters as portrait subjects. Born into a family of church painters, his work often plays with the Catholic themes that were instilled in him at an early age. Coronel worked for twenty years in his Uncle's workshop, first as an apprentice, then later as an artist. It was during this time that the themes of Coronel's work would begin to emerge. His paintings often feature past masters of painting in muted, surrealist settings, surrounded by fog and ghostly apparitions. Though he often worked in other mediums, like sculpture, his trademark impressionistic paintings quickly gave him recognition in Mexico, then later abroad -- especially in the southwest United States. His work has been exhibited in galleries across the world, but one would prove especially important to the young artist -- in 1959 while exhibiting at the Forsythe Gallery in Ann Arbor Michigan, he met Ruth Rivera Marin (daughter of Diego Rivera). The two would eventually marry. Coronel died in 2019.
