

Manifest Counseling - The Rights of Clients in Psychotherapy

1. You have the right to decide not to enter therapy with me. If you wish, I will provide you with the names of other therapists.
 2. You have the right to end therapy at any time. The only thing you will have to do is to pay for any treatments you have already received. You may, of course, encounter issues with other individuals or agencies if you end therapy—for example, if you have been sent to therapy by a court.
 3. You have the right to ask any questions, at any time, about what we do during therapy, and to receive answers that satisfy you. I will explain my methods to you.
 4. You have the right not to allow the use of any therapy technique. If I plan to use any unusual technique, I will tell you and discuss its benefits and risks.
 5. You have the right to keep what you tell me private. Generally, no one will learn of our work without your written permission. There are some situations in which I am required by law to reveal some of the things you tell me, even without your permission, and if I do reveal these things I am not required by the law to tell you that I have done so. Here are some of these situations:
 - a. If you seriously threaten to harm another person, I must warn that person and the authorities.
 - b. If a court orders me to testify about you, I must do so.
 - c. If I am testing or treating you under a court order, I must report my findings to the court.
 - d. If you disclose any previously unreported and/or ongoing abuse or neglect of a minor or elder, I must report that abuse/neglect.
 6. If I wish to record a session, I will get your informed consent in writing. You have the right to prevent any such recording.
 7. You have the right to review your records in my files at any time, to add to or correct them, and to get copies for other professionals to use.
