Over 90 Days for Defending the People

September Juche 111 (2022)

The Democratic People's Republic of Korea maintained a stabilized epidemic prevention situation for more than two years in the face of the global public health crisis, but the malignant virus entered its territory, which posed the worst national crisis for it.

To cope with the crisis, the country raised the level of the national epidemic prevention work to the highest anti-epidemic emergency level on May 12, Juche 111 (2022). It eliminated the virus in about 90 days since then and restored stability and peace.

It owed this miraculous success to the wise leadership of the respected Comrade Kim Jong Un. He convened major meetings of the Workers' Party of Korea successively and proposed people-oriented and scientific anti-epidemic measures and methods.

He ensured that the country moved to the highest-level emergency anti-epidemic system, and took measures for supplying medicines to all the fever cases across the country and providing daily necessities to the people. And he set forth the tasks for building a national anti-epidemic capacity simultaneously so that the people could be provided with a dependable anti-epidemic environment in the face of any public health crisis.

Under his leadership, a strict anti-epidemic system and discipline was established in the country and anti-epidemic policies were accurately executed. The Korean people unconditionally supported the measures adopted by the state and rose up, united around the WPK more closely.

Flowers of Tenderness and Human Feeling in Full Bloom

The highest-level anti-epidemic emergency period witnessed full bloom of beautiful traits of regarding others' pains as one's own, caring for and sharing love and affection with one another in every region, village and unit.

Army-people unity consolidated in the harshest times

The KPA medics were dispatched to the pharmacies in the capital city on a mission to stabilize the transport and supply of medicines, but more than that they all strove to their utmost to safeguard the people's lives and health.

Even when they had high fever, they never touched a single tablet of the medicines for the people. They undertook medicine supply and treatment for the patients at home by visiting them as well as those who came to the pharmacies. Some of them donated their blood to patients in a critical state and fully treated a girl, who was never thought to be able to walk on her feet again. All of these laudable deeds would have been impossible or inconceivable in simply responding to orders.

They were much more than mere medical workers in military uniform.

They were the people's siblings who were more solicitous, more sincere and more selfless than their families in caring for them.

Their ennobling and devoted spiritual traits can be characterized as a death-defying motive for encouraging the capital city's citizens to overcome their fear of the epidemic crisis.

On August 14, the Korean People's Army medics returned to their units. Nobody knew they would leave at midnight or at dawn.

After the highest anti-epidemic emergency level had been downgraded, the citizens, feeling sorry for their departure, used to drop in at the pharmacies on their way back home from work and requested that the soldiers should let them know when they would leave.

It is the spiritual and moral discipline of the KPA soldiers that they should never impose on the people in any circumstances.

Thousands of the medics, who had maintained the principle during the over 90-day emergency anti-epidemic campaign in the capital city, silently left the streets of peace and stability in the dead of night or at dawn without any formal farewell ceremony so as not to impose on the citizens.
