

Dwelling Houses Inaugurated in Taephyong, Pyongyang

Recently, new streets that epitomize socialist civilization have been built in various parts of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

Amid a brisk campaign for attaining the goal of housing construction set at the Sixth Plenary Meeting of the Eighth Central Committee of the ruling Workers' Party of Korea, another modern residential quarters were built in the Taephyong area in the suburbs of Pyongyang. The inauguration ceremony of the dwelling houses was held on May 21.

The new, unique-style architectural group reflects the ideal of the people-first politics of the Party and the government which realize the demands and interests of the people without fail no matter how difficult conditions and environment may be.

Inauguration ceremony of the dwelling houses built in the Taephyong area as another symbol of the golden age of Pyongyang of the new era.

The new architectural group with multi-storied and high-rise apartment buildings is equipped with neighbourhood-serving amenities like schools, kindergartens and clinics.

Pyongyang Gold Lane

The Pyongyang Gold Lane is situated on the bank of the picturesque Taedong River in Pyongyang, the capital city of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. Inaugurated in February 1994, it has three cone-shaped roofs.

With two storeys above and one under the ground, it is equipped with 40 bowling lanes controlled by computers and various amusement and service facilities.

The gold lane, which is capable of hosting international bowling contests, is frequented by many working people including youth and students.
