Report on the UN Commission on the Status of Women (CSW69)

Introduction

The 69th session of the UN Commission on the Status of Women (CSW69) highlights the need for a robust and structured approach to gender equality and women's empowerment. A gender capacity framework provides a systematic methodology to assess, develop, and sustain gender-responsive policies and programs. This document proposes a pragmatic approach to designing a comprehensive gender capacity framework aligned with CSW69 priorities.

Core Principles

1. Inclusivity: Ensure diverse voices, including marginalized and underrepresented groups, are integrated.
2. Evidence-Based Approach: Utilize data-driven insights to inform policy and capacity-building measures.
3. Sustainability: Build long-term mechanisms for gender-responsive governance.
4. Sector and International bodies.
5. Multi-Stakeholder Engagement: Involve governments & civil society.
6. Private Accountability: Establish measurable indicators to track progress and impact.

Report on the UN Commission on the Status of Women (CSW69)

Key Components of the Framework

1. Institutional Strengthening

- Develop gender-responsive policies and integrate them into national action plans.
- Enhance institutional capacity through gender mainstreaming plans.
- Conduct gender audits to assess gaps and areas of improvement.

2. Capacity Development Gender-Sensitive Governance Training

- Integrate gender-focused curricula in academic institutions.
- Strengthen women's leadership and participation in decision-making processes
- Train policymakers, public official's and community leaders in training.

3. Economic Empowerment

- Ensure equal access to financial resources, entrepreneurship support, and employment opportunities.
- Promote gender-responsive budgeting and inclusive economic policies.
- Leverage technology to bridge gender disparities in financial inclusion.

4. Legal and Policy Reform

- Strengthen laws addressing gender-based violence, workplace discrimination, reformed equal pay.
- Monitor and evaluate the implementation of gender-related laws.
- Establish gender-responsive justice systems.

5. Social and Cultural Transformation

- Challenge discriminatory norms through awareness campaigns and media engagement.
- Promote positive role models and community-driven gender advocacy.
- Foster partnerships between traditional and modern institutions for gender-inclusive practices.

Framework for Advancing Gender Equality

Report on the UN Commission on the Status of Women (CSW69)

Implementation Strategy and Expected Outcomes

Implementation Strategy

- Stakeholder Mapping: Identify key actors (govt, NGOs, private sector, UN bodies).
- Needs Assessment: Conduct gender audits and consultations to understand gaps.
- Action Plan Development: Define short-, medium-, and long-term goals.
- Resource Allocation: Mobilize funding from national and international sources.
- Monitoring & Evaluation: Use gender-sensitive indicators to assess progress and impact.
- Policy Advocacy: Engage policymakers for sustained commitment and reforms.

Expected Outcomes

- Strengthened gender capacity at institutional and community levels.
- Increased female representation in leadership roles and decision-making.
- Enhanced economic opportunities and improved financial inclusion for women..
- Robust legal frameworks for protection and empowerment of women.
- Cultural transformation promoting gender equality and social inclusion.

@IndiaUNNewYork and @UN_Women organized a Ministerial-level roundtable on two important topics related to women empowerment on the sidelines of 69th session of CSW:

- ➡ Digital & Financial Inclusion for women’s empowerment
- ➡ Financing for Women empowerment - criticality of core resources.

Hon’ble Minister @Annapurna4BJP addressed a packed hall, outlining India’s women-led development story and highlighted landmark initiatives in India aimed at expanding financial inclusion of women.

In his remarks, @AmbHarishP elaborated on the transformative impact of India’s foundational ID Aadhaar, particularly in the sphere of women’s empowerment.

Hon’ble Ministers from Indonesia, Morocco, Australia, Panama and Qatar took part in the roundtable.

Ministers exchanged best practices and shared their views on how technology can be leveraged to foster the initiative of women-led development.

Executive Director of @UN_Women Ms. Sima Bahous, Deputy Executive Director Ms. Kirsi Madi and G20 Women Task Force Member Smt. Nayana Sahasrabuddhe also spoke on the occasion.

WOMEN-LED DEVELOPMENT & GLOBAL LEADERSHIP

BMIT AT PERMANENT MISSION OF INDIA TO UNITED NATIONS

BMIT observed the core session

- Access to Finance & Digital Tools: Empowering women entrepreneurs.
- Formal Employment Pathways: Scalable models for workforce integration.
- Legal & Policy Frameworks: Strengthening commitments to women's rights.
- Brought grassroots perspectives from India into the global conversation.

Key Insights from the Event

- Women's equal participation could add $28 trillion to global GDP.
- Only 28% of managerial roles are held by women globally.
- Legal frameworks must promote women's economic participation.

Looking Ahead

- Scale collaborative models blending policy, finance, and digital access.
- Secure investments in community-based digital projects in India.
- Ensure women's inclusion at all levels of decision-making.

Overview

As an active organisation at this high-level dialogue, BMIT had the privilege of contributing to a powerful conversation on systemic transformation through women's leadership. The event convened global policymakers, industry leaders, and gender equality champions to deliberate on unlocking the vast economic potential of women by breaking down structural barriers and driving inclusive policy.

Strategic Alignment with Global Agendas

This event aligned with CSW69 and the 2030 Agenda, especially:

- SDG 5: Gender Equality
- SDG 8: Decent Work & Economic Growth
- SDG 17: Partnerships for the Goals

KEY POINT: Women cannot be leaders if their safety is consistently threatened.

As international stakeholders, how can we build on the momentum that India has built in Beijing +30 to continue this upwards trajectory for women in leadership positions, and in ensuring their safety?

-Vedanshi Vala (BMIT)

Proud to have moderated a powerful conversation on "Women's Participation and Leadership: Key Drivers for Economic Growth and Equality" in New York, curated by the Alliance for Global Good – Gender Equity and Equality and graciously hosted by the Permanent Mission of India to the @UN.

The discussion focused on bridging systemic gaps—enhancing access to finance, digital tools, and formal employment while strengthening legal frameworks that uphold women's rights.

Collaboration across sectors isn't just necessary—it's the key to transformative change. Placing women at the center of economic and policy decisions drives global progress.

The momentum is building. The question is—how will we accelerate it?

UN women CSW69 is mobilising efforts to reaffirm commitments, bolster political will and take stock of the progress. Women empowerment is more than a concept note, it's a catalyst for societal transformation. Over the years Global narratives have shifted from seeing women solely as beneficiaries of development to recognising them as active agents of change. Among the key drivers of this Empowerment is financial support, which has proven to unlock opportunities, foster independence and create a ripple effect of positive growth within communities. Investment in education has direct contribution to economic growth. Empowered Women in Vedic age -(1500BC-500BC) Women in Vedic Society had the right to own property, participate in decision making, Choose their paths and choose their partners. Historical references suggest that women were not confined to domestic roles but also engaged in warfare and governance. Today, as the world advocates for women's empowerment, revisiting the Vedic principles of Education, Independence and equality can offer a strong foundation for progress. By fostering an environment where women are respected and given equal opportunities, society can reclaim the wisdom of the past and build a future where both men and women thrive together.

Purpose -

Aims to highlight the role of Peace education in strengthening women's right and bringing about practical changes with awareness, interactions & formal /informal talks with the help of great women participation at CSW69, CSO members & NGOs

Sharing experiences ,encouraging through dialogues, honouring the "Unsung Hero".

For Peace and Development of women & Girls in all fields.

Building networks and strengthening sustainable collaboration. Establishing lasting Partnership among NGOs, CSOs and activists globally.

Peace education goes beyond knowledge acquisition—it is a transformative process that equips women with the skills for conflict resolution, non-violent communication, advocacy of their rights, and active peacebuilding. Peace education for women is crucial in empowering women as agents of peace in both social and political spheres. This NGO Parallel Event will provide a platform for women who have undergone peace education to share their experiences and discuss their role in peace processes. It will explore how peace education fosters women's empowerment and active participation and identify practical strategies for expanding access to peace education globally.

Women's peace education serves as a catalyst for advancing the Beijing Platform for Action (BPfA) and the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs). Empowering women, who make up half of the global population, to lead the movement for peace beyond discrimination and violence accelerates the realization of gender equality and sustainable peace.

This event aims to highlight the role of peace education in strengthening women's rights and driving practical change. It will bring together NGOs, civil society organization (CSOs), activists, and policy experts to exchange experiences and explore collaborative solutions. The discussions will include examples of how peace education has transformed women's lives and explore ways to integrate peace education into national policies and educational programs.

1) Sharing Experiences and Best Practices.

- Showcasing the real-life transformation made by women who have received peace education in their lives and communities, highlighting its impact on women's empowerment and peacebuilding.
- Exploring how peace education can be effectively implemented across different cultural and regional contexts.

2) Advocating for Action

- Discussing strategies to expand access to women's peace education at all levels.
- Advocating for peace education as a key tool for advancing women's rights and the right to peace.

3) Building Networks and Strengthening Sustainable Collaboration

- Establishing lasting partnerships among NGOs, CSOs, educators and activists, and laying the groundwork for joint initiatives.

Title / description: WYDE Women’s Leadership - Transforming norms: Advancing women's leadership

Location: ECOSOC Chamber, UNHQ

Key points: This session explored how mass media and campaigns can shift social norms around women in leadership. Representation isn't just about visibility, but power—media must portray women leaders in ways that are relatable and not gendered. Media can reinforce harmful stereotypes, but it can also reshape narratives if used thoughtfully. Diverse voices and allyship are essential in driving change. In regions like South Asia, cultural resistance and tech-facilitated gender-based violence remain barriers. Ultimately, we need creative, context-specific strategies, invest in networks, and focus on which women we uplift and how.

Location: Delegates Dining Room, UNHQ

Key points: This session highlighted the Kingdom’s strides in women’s economic participation, surpassing its 30% labor market goal and expanding into non-traditional sectors like tech and cybersecurity. Vision 2030 has driven cultural and legislative shifts—introducing flexible work, legal reforms, and increased representation in leadership and sports. Panelists emphasized that women’s leadership must be impactful, not symbolic, and backed by political will, partnerships, and inclusive frameworks. Initiatives such as pro bono legal access, driver training programs, and education in cutting-edge fields are helping ensure women contribute meaningfully to economic growth and innovation across sectors.

Organizers: Parliament of Canada

Title / description: A Beijing+30 Report Card

Location: Church Center for the UN

Key points: This session emphasized the importance of being physically present at CSW to claim space, influence decision-making, and center marginalized voices—especially those of Indigenous women. Speakers highlighted that true equity means recognizing rights, sovereignty, and leadership—not assimilation. From calls for Indigenous-led crisis response to critiques of tokenism in policymaking, the discussion underscored the need for shared leadership and structural change. Civil society's role in holding governments accountable—through parallel reports and persistent advocacy—was also emphasized, along with the importance of removing barriers, not just amplifying voices, in allyship and international solidarity.

Key points: UN Secretary-General António Guterres addressed the urgency of combating rising misogyny, which threatens to reverse hard-won progress on gender equality. Reflecting on the legacy of the Beijing Platform, he honored those on the frontlines and acknowledged the violence faced by women's and human rights defenders. Guterres emphasized that inequality stems from imbalanced power—and that power must be challenged, not passively received. He encouraged using tools like social media to hold leaders accountable and reaffirmed his commitment to advancing women’s decision-making power within the UN and beyond.

Title / description: Shifting Gears: From Women’s Empowerment to Educating for Change

Location: Virtual

Key points: This session, grounded in the context of Indian cultural shifts pertaining to gender equity, explored shifting gender dynamics within families, where increasing individualism is impacting traditional support systems. Financial decision-making still largely rests with men, reinforcing gendered power imbalances. However, panelists emphasized that gender equity isn’t just a women’s issue—it benefits sons as much as daughters by modeling healthier, more respectful relationships. Breaking cycles of dominance begins at home, with families that embrace shared responsibility and emotional openness, including allowing men to express vulnerability without judgment. These cultural shifts are essential to building more equitable communities from the ground up.

Location: Conference Room 2

Key points: The speakers noted that substantial strides have been made but there are persistent barriers in attaining meaningful participation in political offices. Some of the major obstacles that were discussed , societal resistance to women leadership, media bias, targeted harassment , lack of political funding for women candidates .Chilean President Michelle Bachelet - shared her personal experience when she was told that a women's appointment would lead to replacement of a male politician ,which showed resistance to include women in political offices. Leader Ana Redondo brought out the point of lack of political funding for contesting election for women candidates. The Panel highlighted that implementing mentorship programs to encourage and guide female aspirants ,implementing laws to create a more equitable political environment , support women political empowerment by global collaboration & establishing funds to help support women political aspirants.

Title / description: 30 Years of the Beijing Platform for Action: Looking Back, Pushing Forward

Location: Harvard Club

Key points: This session, featuring veterans who shaped the Beijing Declaration, reflected on the monumental achievement of the 1995 conference and its lasting impact. One panelist recalled the final approval of the platform at 4:15 AM, noting the exhaustion of those involved—many working in shifts and even sleeping on the floor. Despite initial hesitations around gender as a social construct and human rights issues, the declaration emerged as a beacon for global women's rights, marking a pivotal moment in multilateral diplomacy. The session also highlighted the ongoing struggle to uphold these rights, as subsequent follow-up meetings have often watered down the agenda. Notably, the panelists reminded the audience of the challenges faced today, including the growing backlash against women's rights, with well-funded efforts threatening progress. Despite setbacks, they celebrated milestones such as the inauguration of Namibia's first female president, and encouraged a glass-half-full perspective to stay motivated in the fight for equality. The session ended with a powerful reminder: the struggle for women's rights must be global, but it starts at home, and there is no such thing as individual destiny.

Title / description: Promising Practices to Reduce the Harmful Impact of Imprisonment on Women – A Key Step Forward in Implementing the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action

Location: Conference Room 9, UNHQ

Key points: This session highlighted the intersection of gender inequality, poverty, and the criminal justice system, marking the 15th anniversary of the Nelson Mandela Rules and the Bangkok Rules for women in prison. Despite their established standards, the treatment of incarcerated women remains an overlooked issue. Many women, particularly those imprisoned for minor or non-violent drug-related offenses, face extreme challenges, including health issues, separation from children, and difficulty reintegrating into society post-incarceration. Testimonies emphasized how women's crimes are often survival mechanisms in the face of violence. The session called attention to the need for gender-disaggregated data and community-based solutions, highlighting the criminalization of behaviors related to poverty, survival, or identity, such as sex work or attempting to escape abusive relationships. The session also celebrated positive reforms, like the decriminalization of begging in India and sex work in Belgium, urging a shift from punitive approaches to a health-centered model for addressing issues like drug consumption. Ultimately, it stressed the importance of grassroots-led change and a more holistic approach to justice that includes women, children, and marginalized communities.

Organizers: Sahiyo, Asian Women’s Shelter, Silence Speaks
Title / description: Storytelling as a tool for FGM/C survivor-centered change

Location: Church Center for the UN

Key points: This session focused on the power of storytelling from survivors of Female Genital Mutilation/Cutting (FGM/C), emphasizing the importance of sharing personal narratives to foster healing, raise awareness, and drive change. Storytelling can increase self-esteem, inspire action, and influence policy, especially when survivors control the narrative. Best practices include creating safe spaces for storytelling through scriptwriting, audio recordings, and imagery, while maintaining anonymity if necessary. A key insight was the struggle survivors face between challenging harmful practices and remaining part of their community. For some, questioning these traditions leads to fears of exclusion or shame, particularly when family members who continue the cycle are also survivors, and they recognize that they can both love the individuals who are part of their families and communities while also disagreeing with their decisions and views in relation to this form of violence. The session highlighted the complexity of FGM, including the emotional and physical trauma, as well as the need for culturally sensitive advocacy that avoids sensationalism. Survivors shared their experiences of psychological pain, as well as the importance of offering agency to survivors instead of positioning them as victims. A panelist shared how their experiences at the intersectionality of being both a survivor of FGM and a nonbinary individual further complicates these issues, underscoring the need for nuanced support and care. Ultimately, the session reinforced the importance of giving survivors the platform to share their stories on their own terms.

Organizers: IWPG, BMIT, AIWC
Title / description: Women’s Empowerment & Peace Education

Location: Church Center for the UN

Key points: IWPG advocates for a peaceful world through education, empowering women to become peace educators. The organization emphasizes that achieving peace is not solely dependent on policies but requires a cultural shift toward non-violence and conflict resolution. It stresses that in war, protecting human rights and sustainable development becomes nearly impossible. Key strategies include tackling issues like child marriage, which can be reduced by 30% through primary education and 60% with secondary or higher education. Global challenges such as cyberbullying in Fiji, stalking and femicide in Mexico, and violence at home call for peacebuilding and the recognition of violence as a human rights issue. Panelists also spoke about India’s progress, highlighting the country’s female leadership and the vital role of women in civilization-building. While India promotes the empowerment of women through initiatives like "Beti Bachao, Beti Padhao" (Save the Girl Child, Educate the Girl Child), the country still faces challenges related to safety and financial constraints for women. The message resonates with the idea that peace is a right for all, not a privilege, and underscores the importance of sharing knowledge, breaking down borders, and empowering women globally.

Organizers: Malwai & PKN Consortium

Title / description: What Works to Prevent Violence Against Women and Girls at Scale: Leveraging Local Leadership

Conference Room A, UNHQ

Key points: Malawi has developed a comprehensive national plan of action to combat gender-based violence (GBV), focusing on prevention, response, and accountability mechanisms through strengthened partnerships with civil society, global partners, and traditional leaders. The country aims to adopt a preventative approach rather than responding only after violence occurs. Key interventions include a national GBV hotline providing counseling, legal, medical support, and shelter referrals, alongside 20 one-stop centers offering psychosocial, medical, and legal assistance. Despite these efforts, approximately 42% of married women in Malawi have experienced violence, and the system faces challenges such as the reluctance of some women to go through legal processes due to fear or stigma. The Malawi Human Rights Commission notes that some women prefer to remain in abusive or violent situations rather than seek help, and additional resources are needed to strengthen these services and make them accessible. Local leaders, including religious figures and traditional authorities, play a crucial role in community-based interventions, and efforts to update legal frameworks are ongoing. As one speaker stated, “We can meet at the UN, but without grassroot implementation, it’s useless.”

Organizers: World Bank Group, WHO, UNICEF, Sexual Violence Research Initiative

Title / description: Evidence from the Violence Against Women Field: Achievements and Lessons from Three Decades Post-Beijing

Location: Conference Room 9, UNHQ

Key points: Sweden collaborates with organizations using an intersectional approach to address violence against women (VAW), recognizing that factors like identity and socioeconomic status increase vulnerability. VAW is preventable through multi sectoral strategies, including investments in feminist NGOs and the use of public health data to prioritize VAW on the global health agenda. Key lessons since Beijing 1995 emphasize the importance of engaging survivors in research, addressing the link between violence against women and children, and leveraging technology for data collection and digital innovations. While progress has been made, challenges remain in securing political will, addressing data gaps, and tackling new issues like online violence. Effective prevention requires a comprehensive, multi-dimensional approach and a focus on both perpetrators and prevention, especially in resource-poor settings.

Title / description: Title / description: Male Involvement in Ending Gender-Based Violence and HIV

Location: Conference Room A, UNHQ

Key points: The focus on family issues, particularly at home, is central to addressing gender-based violence (GBV), HIV/AIDS, and teen pregnancies, with a recognition that these challenges often intersect. Men must be engaged as allies in the fight against toxic masculinity, acting as agents of change within their communities. Programs emphasize the importance of positive role models, especially for young men, and encourage men to step up as responsible fathers, with initiatives like the Fatherhood Project promoting parenting skills. Men’s involvement is crucial for reducing GBV, HIV, and teen pregnancies, as these issues cannot be solved without both men and women at the table. Mental health, socialization, and cultural norms play key roles, with interventions addressing perpetrators and encouraging healthier views on consent, masculinity, and emotional well-being. Safe spaces for men are necessary to foster open discussions, as well as community-driven campaigns targeting social media and cultural spaces to reshape narratives around masculinity and violence.

BMIT AT CSW 69

BMIT AT CSW 69 - Closing Ceremony

---

CSW69- Suggestion by BMIT - Ratna Joshi.

Thank you for your continual effort for having all the women folks around the world together.
It's a highly difficult task brining in women from different countries, having different backgrounds and different thought processes together.

My request/A suggestion -
We can have a global syllabus to walk on - like a path.

We must have global grades - 1, 2 & 3

This will help women and the organisations to come together and process their thoughts collectively in the right direction that has discussed.

So, we can have a Global Syllabus but segregated -

-certain grassroot level programs for domestic violence against women

- certain programs for education for women, hygiene, higher education, aspirations that need guidance

So we need an app that will guide us, surveys that will decide our capacity and credentials to move ahead.

We must also have a report card as, women relate to “ Report Cards” - being mothers and teachers as associating with this concept comes naturally to them. This will help women globally to move ahead together in the same direction with the same goal.

Thank you for giving me an opportunity on this great platform at the CSW69 event.

Namaste from India.
