1st Reading: Wisdom 1:13-15; 2:23-24

This is the first instance noted in scripture where the ‘devil’ is synonymous with the serpent, as mentioned in Genesis. This personification of evil makes placing the blame for ‘death’ on someone (or thing) other than God, and it perhaps reflects a Greek influence. But the focus should be on God’s intention: For God formed man to be imperishable; in the image of his own nature he made him. Humans were (are) created in God’s image and as such are at base ‘good’. We are inclined to drift away from God, and that is sin- whether or not the temptation comes from our own hearts or from some outside source.

2nd Reading: 2 Corinthians 8:7, 9, 13-15

This is an example of how the Apostle Paul raised money; in this instance from the Corinthian church. His approach involved not only tying in theological comparisons (Christ becoming poor so that we might become rich), but also practical appeal to equaling out the wealth somewhat. Of course, he was raising money so that Christians wouldn’t starve and the gospel might be preached; his church was the Body of Christ, not a building in Corinth. That probably helped.

Gospel Reading: Mark 5:21-43

The message here is twofold: faith in Jesus precedes forgiving (or healing) of sin and Jesus grants ‘life’ even after death. Both of these, as related in Mark’s gospel, happen in the flesh but, more importantly, foreshadow Christ’s great salvation gift that would come to all humanity after his death and resurrection. When Jesus instructs the witnesses to the raising of Jairus’ daughter not to say anything about the miracle, it may be because he knew that it couldn’t be fully understood until after his resurrection. Of course, Christ’s forgiving of sin and granting of life becomes one in the same through grace, baptism, and faith. As in the first reading passage from Wisdom, God has always intended humans to be ‘imperishable’, and in Jesus Christ the intention is fulfilled.
