Aroooooo!!

We've been busy adding new products to our shop range, food wise we have some great new options available, from long lasting chews, to daily feeding options, I'm on a constant quest to bring the healthiest options to feed your Little Wolves.

We have a new range of anatomic harness, Petforta. Ensuring dogs wear the best harness for their shape is essential for joint health, movement and safety. Our team are trained on how to effectively fit harnesses, as well the health impacts of poorly fitted and ill designed harnesses. You may be surprised by how the harness you use for your dog rates on an anatomic and safety level.

We're deep into planning our Halloween event for this year. Halloween is our biggest event of the year, due to how inclusive it is. It's a fun, community focused, celebration that we absolutely enjoy hosting each year. Your save the date is in this newsletter.

Have you tried our product of the month? Our new promotion provides a great opportunity to explore our range of products and explain how they benefit your dog. You also get discounts off the product of the month, just a little extra incentive to try something new and expand your Little Wolf's world.

Be well and have a fabulous day!

Ashka

LITTLE WOLF WELLNESS

This edition we're excited to provide valuable information to help you decide the best option when it comes to vaccinating your little wolf. We would like to thank Dr Muir and his team at All Natural Vet Care in Russell Lea, for supporting us in our mission to provide the best support when it comes to caring for your precious family members.

Titre Testing: Fewer Vaccines, Same Protection

Dr Matthew J Muir - Clinical Director, All Natural Vet Care
July 2025

Did you know your dog may not need repeat vaccinations every year—or even every three years? At our clinic, we've been offering titre testing for over 20 years to check immunity levels and avoid unnecessary vaccines.

What is Titre Testing?

A titre test measures antibodies in your dog's blood for viral diseases like parvovirus, distemper, and adenovirus. Research shows these vaccines often provide long-lasting or even lifelong immunity once the puppy series and young adult booster are complete. We usually start titre testing after the puppy vaccines finish or after the first annual booster, and then repeat titres whenever vaccine risk assessments are due according to vaccine manufacturers' schedules—rather than vaccinating automatically.

Are Titre Results Proven Protective?

Yes. Titre testing is widely accepted in veterinary and human medicine:

- Rabies quarantine in Australia: Strict quarantine authorities require rabies titres to confirm protection before pets enter the country—vaccination records alone aren't accepted.
- Hepatitis B in humans: Healthcare workers use titres to confirm immunity and avoid unnecessary boosters, proving this method is reliable and mainstream.
- AAHA Guidelines: The American Animal Hospital Association (AAHA) vaccination guidelines confirm that positive titres for canine distemper virus, parvovirus, and adenovirus correlate strongly with protective immunity. This means a positive titre indicates your dog does not need revaccination for these diseases.

While titre cut-offs can vary between labs, we interpret them carefully and always consider your pet's overall health and lifestyle. Even if they are low, it can still mean protection for some adult dogs.

LITTLE WOLF WELLNESS

Why Fewer Vaccines Can Be Safer

- Reduces vaccine-related risks: One rare but serious side effect of unnecessary vaccination is immune-mediated hemolytic anemia (IMHA)—a life-threatening autoimmune condition where the immune system attacks red blood cells (Duval & Giger, JAVMA, 1996). <https://onlinelibrary.wiley.com/doi/abs/10.1111/j.1939-1676.1996.tb02064.x>
- Tailored to your pet's health: Vaccine manufacturers recommend vaccinating only "healthy pets." If your dog has allergies, autoimmune disease, cancer, or other chronic conditions, we weigh the risks and benefits before revaccinating.
- Bacterial vaccines handled separately: Titre testing applies to viral diseases. Bacterial vaccines (like leptospirosis or kennel cough) provide shorter immunity, so we assess these separately.

Our Experience

Most dogs who've had their puppy vaccines and a young adult booster remain protected for many years—often for life. By testing rather than guessing, we avoid unnecessary vaccines and reduce risk.

Affordable Peace of Mind

Titre testing can cost over $400 at some clinics, but we offer it for just $125. This gives you confidence in your dog's protection—without over-vaccinating.

You can call All Natural Vet Care to book a titre test and give your dog fewer vaccines with the same level of protection on 02 97125844.
