Nestled deep within the glacial valley of Glrndalough in County Wicklow, Ireland, sits St. Kevin's Kitchen, a remarkably preserved early Christian church dating back to the 12th century. Despite its name, it was never actually a kitchen; rather, this sturdy stone structure with its uniquely steep roof and miniature round tower earned the moniker because the tower resembled a kitchen chimney to onlookers of old. Today, this ancient building stands as a significant historical landmark within the breathtaking landscape, a testament to Ireland's early monastic heritage rather than a place for preparing meals.
