

How it All Began

Have you ever had the feeling, the life you are living isn't what you wanted. Going through each day as a fish out of water? The urge to go and do something completely different? Just pack up and start fresh the way you want?

Our interests in farming started some time ago, but our property and local zoning laws didn't allow us to pursue our interests in self-sustainability with natural products raised humanely and naturally. As our discontent grew, we started to make choices to eliminate debt, reduce our personal items to be ready to jump. Three years ago, we purchased a vacant foreclosure property that was in complete disrepair on 28 acres to start pursuing our dream. We ripped it down to the studs, replaced the roof and over six months rebuilt it to the point we were able to move ourselves and our four children into it. That was a long summer of tenting it, but over time, the breath was brought back to this old 1890's farmhouse. That is when we truly began our journey of becoming Clucked Out Farm.

It started with chickens and goats and if you ask my husband, all you really need in life is goats and chickens. After spending so much time being told what you can't do, once you are able to make your own choices, there is no sweeter feeling. We continued to add some dairy goats and our first baby goats were born in January of 2017. As we set out on this journey, we wanted to always keep in the forefront what was the best for our animals. We wanted to raise them on our farm as nature intended, "the way things used to be."

As we started milking, we had a lot of milk! More than what we needed for our consumption so we started to make cheeses, utilize the whey for our gardens and animals and make soap with the milk and honey from our bees for our skin. One of our children always had issues with eczema and we learned the true benefits of our goats milk soap at that point. We were so thrilled and started to share our new creation with friends and family as we added different scent and essential oil options for additional medicinal and aromatherapy benefits. What we found was astonishing! The soap didn't just improve dryness and eczema, but it helped the symptoms of psoriasis and other common skin problems as well. The reviews kept pouring in and we hit our first event in to start selling our soap and honey in October 2017. We have since grown our product line to include lotions, bath bombs, raw honey, lip balms, salves, chicken eggs, duck eggs, turkey eggs and pasture raised poultry seasonally.

We continue to grow and attend some events with our kids, but are looking to continue and share our passion for natural bath products and naturally raised food with more people long plagued with skin conditions and provide healthy, sustainable, delicious food options.
