Children go through many developmental stages as they grow and we, as a society, love to create labels that help us understand them: the infamous “Terrible Twos” or the much debated “Four Year Old Testosterone Rush” in little boys. Childhood is full of growings and learnings, ages and stages. This continues all the way up to notorious puberty where our resolve, strength and all the work we’ve done thus far as parents gets put to the ultimate test.

Just before puberty, however, there is a moment in development that does not get much notice in mainstream child development - but it is often a time of great concern to parents, and a time of great awakening for children: The Nine Year Change. Your child is not going crazy - and neither are you! This is a beautiful and necessary part of development that can often be frightening and shocking to all involved.

Take the mystery out of the Nine Year Change - join other parents as we gather together to share and discuss experiences and learn techniques for supporting our children and each other through this important time.

Speaker Rachel Solt serves as Director for Out of the Classroom & Into The World (OCIWorld), an organization dedicated to giving children alternative learning opportunities and educating through real-life experiences. With a background in international relations, public school education and Waldorf education, Rachel brings over a decade of experience teaching young children and working with families. A mother and step-mother of three (now teenagers), Rachel has 16 years of experience raising children.

OCIWorld offers students of all ages, teachers from a variety of specialty areas, and families from around the world local and international experiential and immersion programs.

Together we are breaking down the walls of education and venturing “Out of the Classroom and Into the World!”
