Hiring Manager

RE: Open Position	VIA: Online Submission
-------------------	------------------------

Dear Hiring Manager:

Over my career I've proven time and again that working artfully with data, financials, metrics, formulas, efficiencies, and models is the skillset that I bring to bear against the challenges that come my way. I've applied because I believe this skillset would lend itself well to the open position.

I enjoy working behind the scenes as well as the front lines and I am, by nature, an analytical problem solver. I'm drawn toward underperforming operational aspects of a business, floundering finances, struggling systems, and any opportunity to take on a new challenge or solve a complex problem. Although, the people I work with are ultimately the single biggest factor in my level of job satisfaction and the driving force behind my career choices.

In my current position I provide high level budget and data analysis that assists the West Virginia University John Chambers College of Business and Economics with critical, actionable business intelligence which is leveraged to drive the Strategic Plan with which I also assist. Before WVU I managed the $21MM budget for a large State of West Virginia agency. I'd welcome the chance to provide these types of analytical solutions in the future.

I'd enjoy the opportunity to discuss my experience as it relates to the open position and how we might serve one another best at your convenience.

Sincerely,

Len Hancock
