February 2026

As I write this morning, I find myself dreaming of island hopping, or cruising toward the Caribbean. It's February in Wisconsin and light snow is falling. But I digress. Last year at this time, I was disembarking from my Mexican Riviera cruise in Long Beach, searching for a taxi to return home via the Los Angeles airport.

Cabo San Lucas was a busy and bustling port. Pelicans and sea lions competing for snacks from tourists. Excursion boats waiting for their patrons. Beach goers sharing the afternoon on the sun baked sand. Some danced to music. Others ran into the water or explored the rocky and rugged shoreline. I did what I always enjoy. I walked. I loved spending my afternoon exploring and photographing the landscape, the variety of boats in the harbor and the people, taking a moment to thank street musicians and rest on a nearby rocky retreat with the woman who was selling water to thirsty tourists.

I have imagined this place long before I made a visit. The warm sand under my feet. The smell of salt and citrus in the sea breeze and fresh fish on the grill.

So became the composition at the top: "Land's End". On days like today I still imagine living on the last little bit of rocky hilltop, overlooking the Sea of Cortez. What a life that would be. But back to reality...time for hot cocoa!

Wishing you all great adventures and smooth travels!

Warm Regards,

Sue
