William Savage has spent over two decades transforming classrooms and school communities through his expertise in behavior management and special education. With a blend of humor, relatability, and a deep commitment to student success, Mr. Savage has become a beloved figure among students, staff, and educators alike.

He earned his Bachelor of Science in Criminal Justice in 1997 and began his career as a teaching assistant at a level 5 private school in Prince George's County. Mentored by the school's behavior specialist, he quickly rose to take over that role. Driven to expand his impact, he earned his Master of Science in Special Education in 2005, which led to his promotion as Director of Behavior Management for middle and elementary schools, and later, for all schools under his purview, including high school.

Mr. Savage is known for his practical, tangible training methods that resonate with educators at all levels. His professional development sessions are highly sought after and frequently requested, thanks to his natural ability to command a crowd and connect with his audience. Whether he's sharing strategies or telling a story, his humor and authenticity make every training memorable and impactful.

After 24 years in special education, Mr. Savage transitioned into private practice as a behavioral consultant, bringing his insights and expertise to a wider audience. He now serves as the Alt One teacher at Bates Middle School, where he continues to motivate and guide students and staff with the same energy and passion that have defined his career.

Funny, relatable, and endlessly dedicated, William Savage is more than an educator—he's a mentor, a leader, and a source of inspiration for all who have the privilege of working with him.
