The Campbell County Agriculture Complex is a new addition to the Campbell County Extension Service, which is a branch of the University of Kentucky Cooperative Extension Service. The mission of Extension is to bring unbiased, research-based information from the University of Kentucky to the county level to educate and improve the Campbell County community. The Agriculture Complex was prioritized as a need due to the large animal veterinarian shortage, lack of accessibility to basic services, and other challenges that Campbell County farmers are facing. The goal of the facility is to respond to that need by bridging the gap in the infrastructure that is limiting farmers' potential and productivity, and help keep agriculture alive and profitable in Campbell County. The Agriculture Complex offers a safe livestock handling facility for all species with scales and hoof trimming chutes, and will offer marketing opportunities for producers to sell out of the facility in addition to the other services that Cooperative Extension has traditionally offered, including soil, hay, and diagnostic testing.

Come and take a tour of the new facility and enjoy the antique tractor show hosted by the Licking Valley Antique Tractor Club! Allow 30 minutes at this stop.
