

BEFORE

As a parent of two children with a disability, I wanted to share my story with other parents who may have similar experiences raising children or young adults with disabilities.

I am an adopted parent of two children who happen to have a disability, my son Christopher who is on the Autism Spectrum Disorder and who has a diagnosis of Traumatic Brain Injury(TBI). The focus of this of this book is Dianna and how she has dealt with her disability through her teenage years of high school and allowing her peers to understand and accept her for who she is despite having a disability. But first, I wanted to give a background picture of what led up to writing this book.

In 1999 I became a foster parent, no it wasn't something I decided to do overnight, a great deal of thought and prayer went into it, but given the fact that I came from a family of givers it was an easy decision to make, yes, I grew up in a family who also did foster care and have adopted children with disabilities, so why not do the same. Dianna came into my home in October of the year 2000 as a foster child at the age of 3 years old diagnosis with Traumatic Brain Injury(TBI) from a fall. The caseworker called said that she had a 3year old girl that needed to be placed with a TBI and other needs, did I hesitate knowing what was going to be the challenges were going to be taking in a child like this?

AFTER

As a parent of two children with a disability, I want to share my experience with other parents who may have similar experiences raising children or young adults with disabilities.

I am an adoptive parent of two children who happen to have a disabilities. My son Christopher who is on the Autism Spectrum Disorder and who has a diagnosis of Traumatic Brain Injury(TBI). The focus of this of this book is my daughter Dianna and how she has dealt with her disability through her high school career. She encourages her peers to understand and accept her for who she is despite having a disability. But first, I wanted to give a background picture of what led to writing this book.

In 1999 I became a foster parent, which is not something I decided to do overnight. A great deal of thought and prayer went into it, but given the fact that I came from a family of givers it was an easy decision to make. I grew up in a family who also did foster care and have adopted children with disabilities, so I decided to follow suit.

Dianna came into my home in October of the year 2000 as a foster child at the age of 3 years old diagnosis with Traumatic Brain Injury(TBI) from a fall. The caseworker called said that she had a 3year old girl that needed to be placed with a TBI and other needs. I did not hesitate knowing the challenges I may face. I accepted the challenge, it was not going to be easy raising a child with a disability in a society where acceptance is so hard to come by. Not taking this little girl into my home was not an option. Could I foresee the future this child was going to have? No, but with faith and perservance, we were going to do our best to make her future bright.
