Lady Lions edged by Georgetown

Penn State's women's cross country fell short of attaining an automatic bid to the NCAA Championships yesterday when the Lady Lions placed second behind Georgetown in the Region II Championships in New Canaan, Ct.

The Lady Lions' Stacy Prey, however, qualified for the Nov. 21 event individually when she placed fourth in 17:22.

Penn State still has a chance at receiving an at-large bid to the NCAA Championships and will find out tomorrow. The Lady Lions are up for four possible bids.

"We are very happy for Stacy,"

Penn State Coach Teri Jordan said. "We are disappointed we did not qualify but it is really tough to beat Georgetown. Stacy is back to 100 percent and we think she can regain the All-American status she received when she was a freshman."

In addition, Penn State also finished sixth in the ECAC Championships behind Yale, Georgetown, Dartmouth, Providence and Harvard.

Jordan said the New Canaan course was flat and was not to Penn State's advantage.

"I think we would have preferred to run more of a hilly course," Jordan said.

George Mason's Kathy O'Neill captured both regional and ECAC honors by winning in 17:07. Prey was fourth in the regional race and seventh in the ECAC.

Other Penn State finishers include Becky Williams, 17th, 18:11; Emily Haas, 18th, 18:12; Amy Aston, 20th, 18:16; Sue Allen, 29th, 18:25; Wendy Nelson, 32nd, 18:33; Laurie Morrow, 44th, 18:46.

Jordan said season best performances were turned in by Prey, Haas, Aston and Allen.

Cross country season ends

The women's cross country team wrapped up its season Nov. 12 at the ECAC/NCAA Region Two Championships, placing 11th in the ECAC and fifth in the NCAA Regionals, with both championships held concurrently.

The overall NCAA Region Two winner was Georgetown, while Yale captured the ECAC crown with 72 points. Villanova finished with 332 points.

"It was an excellent performance by this team, which has not had it easy all season," noted Head Coach Marty Stern. "I'm very proud of this group, which did so well even though we held out many of our top runners this fall."

The conditions of the course for the race were not ideal. "The course conditions were terrible," commented Stern. "It was not laid out well — there were too many repeats and not enough room for the runners, who had to 'funnel in' to narrow passes at times.

"I would like to have seen the race run at Lehigh or New York's Van Cortlandt Park," he continued.

The runners had to make the best of it, nonetheless, and fared well against the competition. Sophomore Kim Certain cracked the NCAA Regional top 10, placing sixth over the 5000-meter course in 17:40. She placed 14th in the ECACs.

"I'd especially like to recognize Kim's performance this week," observed Stern. "She had a great season, and appears to be in the mold of many of the great Villanova runners that have preceded her. She is ready to do some big things this year."

Certain was followed by senior Meg Moisen, who placed 30th and 58th in the NCAA Regionals and ECACs, respectively, in 18:26. Sophomore Kate Fonshell was the next Wildcat finisher, in 18:38, which placed her 35th and 69th.

Fellow sophomore Carol Haux was close behind in 18:43, which placed her 39th and 78th. Junior Elaine Duck was the fifth and final Wildcat included in the scoring, finishing 62nd and 113th in 19:06.

■ At New Canaan, Conn., Mount St. Mary's women's team completed its first season of Division I competition as three of its members took part in regionals.

Carole Monaghan ended her college career as the top Mount finisher for the last four years, placing 128th (19:13). Christine Kutchey was 175th (19:39) and Tracey Crilly finished 255th (21:08) out of 333 runners in a race won by George Mason's Cathy O'Neill.

In team scoring, Yale finished first (72 points), Georgetown was second (94), Dartmouth third (103).
