President's Message

'Tis certainly the season to consider repotting some of my orchids. I see some in need although it hasn't been so long since they were repotted. Some orchids don't yet show the need but the date on my label indicates it's been several years so maybe they should be done before they start to show a need.

I have plenty of clean pots on hand as I got the used ones all cleaned up last fall. I use a tub with warm water, a little dish soap and a jug of Clorox. A good soak and a rub with a stiff brush does most all the good needed. Sometimes roots adhere to the clay pot such that cleaning seems impossible but I find my cordless drill and a wire brush wipes them quite clean.

The next most important need for repotting is media. There is no agreement on the type that works best. Non-organic media like pebbles or clay balls will not decompose like bark. However, in time they will absorb minerals from the fertilizer or water and need to be replaced. As bark decays it releases some nutrients to the plant that non-organic media does not but when that starts happening, the decomposition, then it becomes necessary to repot to keep the media from becoming slush and choking the roots. Non-organic media necessitates the regular use of fertilizer and that also includes micro-nutrients.

Repotting could also include the option of mounting an orchid on a wood or piece of cork bark. Some orchids seem to respond better to one or the other. Part of the reason for that could be the climatic conditions that your growing area can provide. Many orchids live in nature mounted on trees or branches that allows their roots to hang out in the air and breathe or absorb moisture from the air. High humidity at certain times of the day or night can allow a plant to thrive in times of little actual rain.

Education and experience can work wonders if you live long enough.

Good Luck and Good Growing,

Roger Stone
