It's an honour to be asked to provide a character reference. It means that someone, somewhere, thinks that you're an upstanding citizen. But once that first blush of pride has worn off, you're left with what can be quite a daunting task, particularly if you've never written a character reference before. So, where do you start? To give you a helping hand, we're going to cover everything you need to know to write a character reference you can be proud of. What is a character reference? A character reference is a letter written by someone who knows a job applicant well outside of the workplace. Unlike a professional reference, which describes the candidate's professional work experience and skills, it includes information about the individual's personality, people skills and attributes. Prospective employers can use this information to determine whether a candidate has the right characteristics to perform well in a role and whether they're likely to be a good fit for the organisation and the team. Employers don't commonly ask for a character reference to be included in a job application.

Dear sir/madam (or their name if you have it),

I am pleased to write this character reference for [NAME], on behalf of their application to your customer service assistant role.

[NAME] was a student of mine for over five years, and in that time I was able to watch [HIM/HER] grow into a confident, polite, and outgoing individual.

[NAME] is also an extremely goal driven person, who has always shown an ability to meet deadlines promptly, submitting work that frequently exceeds expectations.

Therefore, I am confident that [HE/SHE] will be able to show the same level of commitment and professionalism in [HIS/HER] their work.

Please feel free to get in touch with me if you have any further questions.

Yours faithfully (or sincerely if you know their name),

However, for graduates without any work experience or for people without professional references, a character reference may be required before a job offer is made. Character references may also be necessary when applying for an academic course or when becoming a member of a professional organisation. What should you include in a character reference? You should only agree to write a character reference if you know the person well enough to do so and you have positive things to say. If you can tick both of those boxes, then you're ready to start writing. A character reference should be written in letter format and include the following: Start the letter with a short sentence explaining why you're writing. For example, "I am providing this character reference for Emily Reid, who I would recommend for any role where teamwork and a positive attitude are required." How you know the candidate Explain how you know the candidate and how long you've known them for. You should be specific and concise. You could be asked to provide a character reference in your capacity as a teacher, academic advisor, colleague, professional mentor or simply as a family friend or a neighbour. The candidate's personal qualities Detail the candidate's skills and positive personality traits that make them a good fit for the role and provide specific examples of when you've seen them in practice. Include soft skills such as organisational ability, leadership skills, empathy, a sense of humour, and anything else you think is relevant. Provide contact details that you're happy to share so the organisation can ask you for more information if necessary. What not to include in a character reference Character references should be short and concise, so you must be selective about the information you provide. You should avoid: Giving too much information about yourself Include your name, profession, relationship to the candidate and how long you've known them for. That should provide sufficient context for the employer. Invite them to get in touch if they want to know more. The candidate's weaknesses It's not your job to present a balanced picture of the candidate. The recipient is only expecting to read about their qualities, so any weaknesses you include will really stick in the mind. The candidate might be the crossword champion of Wales and the West, but if it's not relevant to the position, leave it out. Only the positive qualities that make the candidate well suited to the role should be included. Character reference template The following character reference template will give you an idea of the type of information you should include along with the tone and format of the letter. Dear Joe, I am delighted to be able to write to you to provide a character reference for Emily Reid. I have no hesitation in recommending Emily for any role where a positive attitude and excellent organisational skills are required. I have been Emily's professional mentor at the National Cycling Association for the last three years. In that time, I have seen her develop into a confident and personable individual with a positive outlook. For the last two years, she has volunteered to be the social events organiser at the NCA, which is a testament to her sociability and her willingness to get stuck in. There's no doubt in my mind that she'll bring the same level of enthusiasm and positivity to any role within your organisation and will quickly become a popular member of the team. Please feel free to get in touch if you have any questions. It is used to highlight the caregiver's talents and qualities. It is usually a "To Whom It May Concern" Letter with a special focus on an individual's skills in managing the daily activities of either elderly or disabled clients, residents of a facility, or children. Caregiver recommendations and reference letters are very useful for applicants who are applying for a new job. That is because it allows hiring managers to see what an employee performed in past. In fact, caregivers have to perform specialized job tasks that require special abilities and are hard to justify in a Caregiver's Resume. Prospective employers value real-life examples of how the applicant has handled actual situations. The following 2 samples will give you a better idea of how to write a caregiver reference or recommendation letter. Reference Letter for Caregiver (Sample 1) January 3, 2023 To Whom It May Concern It is my immense pleasure to recommend Jane Auburn for the position of Caregiver at Brookdale Senior Living. As her supervisor, I affirm her suitability and ability to work well in personal care capacities. Jane is an honest and diligent young woman who is passionate to help others. While she was working at Scottsdale Senior Residents, she demonstrated immense fervor by providing the residents with a reason to live actively each day. Her presence at the facility made it a fun and well-organized place as she has the ability to display professionalism with a touch of personal attitude that makes her so popular. Not only she can assist the elderly with their daily activities but also she is able to ensure that they do not feel lonely. Besides that, she has a profound habit of completing all tasks with dedication. Many times, she even sacrificed her free time to spend a little more time with the older adults. To summarize, I believe that she will be an asset to any organization because her commitment and caregiving skills are above par. I wish her all the best in her future endeavors. Should you need more information regarding her, please feel free to call or email me.
