

The "Door" Study
from Simons & Levin (1998)

We learn from what we give our attention to and see what we are looking seeking.

How can we learn to see things differently? How can a different viewpoint help? Are we flexible to consider opposing views? Why or why not?