GREEN FOG REPORTED ACROSS MULTIPLE DIMENSIONS PAD DECLARES FIRST INTERDIMENSIONAL SIGNAL EMERGENCY

Independent worlds report identical fog, interference, and an unidentified figure as investigators warn phenomenon is no longer confined to Earth Prime

By Elias J. Mercer, Senior Science Correspondent

The Paranormal Anomalies Division has declared its first Interdimensional Signal Emergency following a sudden wave of Green Fog incidents reported across multiple known realities, marking the most significant escalation since the unexplained phenomenon first appeared on Earth Prime.

According to information obtained by The Signal Gazette, PAD investigators have now confirmed similar incidents in several independently monitored dimensions. The reports contain details officials say are too consistent to dismiss as coincidence: dense green atmospheric formations, sudden communications failure, unexplained radio interference, electrical disturbances, and low-frequency transmissions appearing shortly before or during each event.

More troubling is the fact that several affected worlds possess no known means of communicating with one another.

Yet their witnesses are describing the same thing.

The same fog.

The same interference.

And increasingly, the same figure.

SOMETHING IS STANDING IN THE FOG

Until recently, photographs associated with Green Fog incidents were considered inconclusive. Most showed little beyond unusual atmospheric conditions, distorted light, or shapes investigators attributed to poor visibility and signal corruption.

That changed this week.

A landscape photograph recovered by PAD investigators appears to show a tall humanoid figure standing deep within a Green Fog formation during an active communications blackout. Although image degradation prevents positive identification, analysts have reportedly isolated two small points of green illumination in the area corresponding to the figure's eyes.

PAD has not publicly identified the figure or confirmed that it represents a living entity.

Officials have also cautioned against assuming every reported silhouette is connected to the same phenomenon.

Privately, however, investigators appear considerably less dismissive.

A source familiar with the investigation told The Gazette that photographs recovered from separate dimensions now contain figures possessing what the source described as "disturbingly similar proportions."

The source requested anonymity because they were not authorized to discuss the investigation. (cont. on page 2)

NO LONGER AN EARTH PRIME EVENT

PAD monitoring stations have recorded unusual signal activity accompanying nearly every confirmed Green Fog incident. Analysts initially believed the transmissions originated somewhere within Earth Prime's communications infrastructure. That theory is now being reconsidered. Signal traces have reportedly appeared simultaneously in realities separated by dimensional boundaries that should make conventional transmission impossible. In several cases, monitoring equipment began receiving interference before the fog became visible.

PAD has ordered expanded monitoring of known dimensional access points and has advised field personnel not to enter Green Fog formations without signal shielding and direct communications support.

Civilians encountering unexplained green atmospheric activity are being urged to leave the area rather than investigate.

QUESTIONS PAD CANNOT YET ANSWER

Officials insist there is currently no evidence of a coordinated attack. They have been considerably less willing to say what evidence would be required to establish one.

The declaration of an Interdimensional Signal Emergency allows PAD to coordinate surveillance and evidence recovery across multiple realities while temporarily restricting public access to certain dimensional incident records.

For an agency normally reluctant to acknowledge even the existence of cross-dimensional threats, the decision is extraordinary.

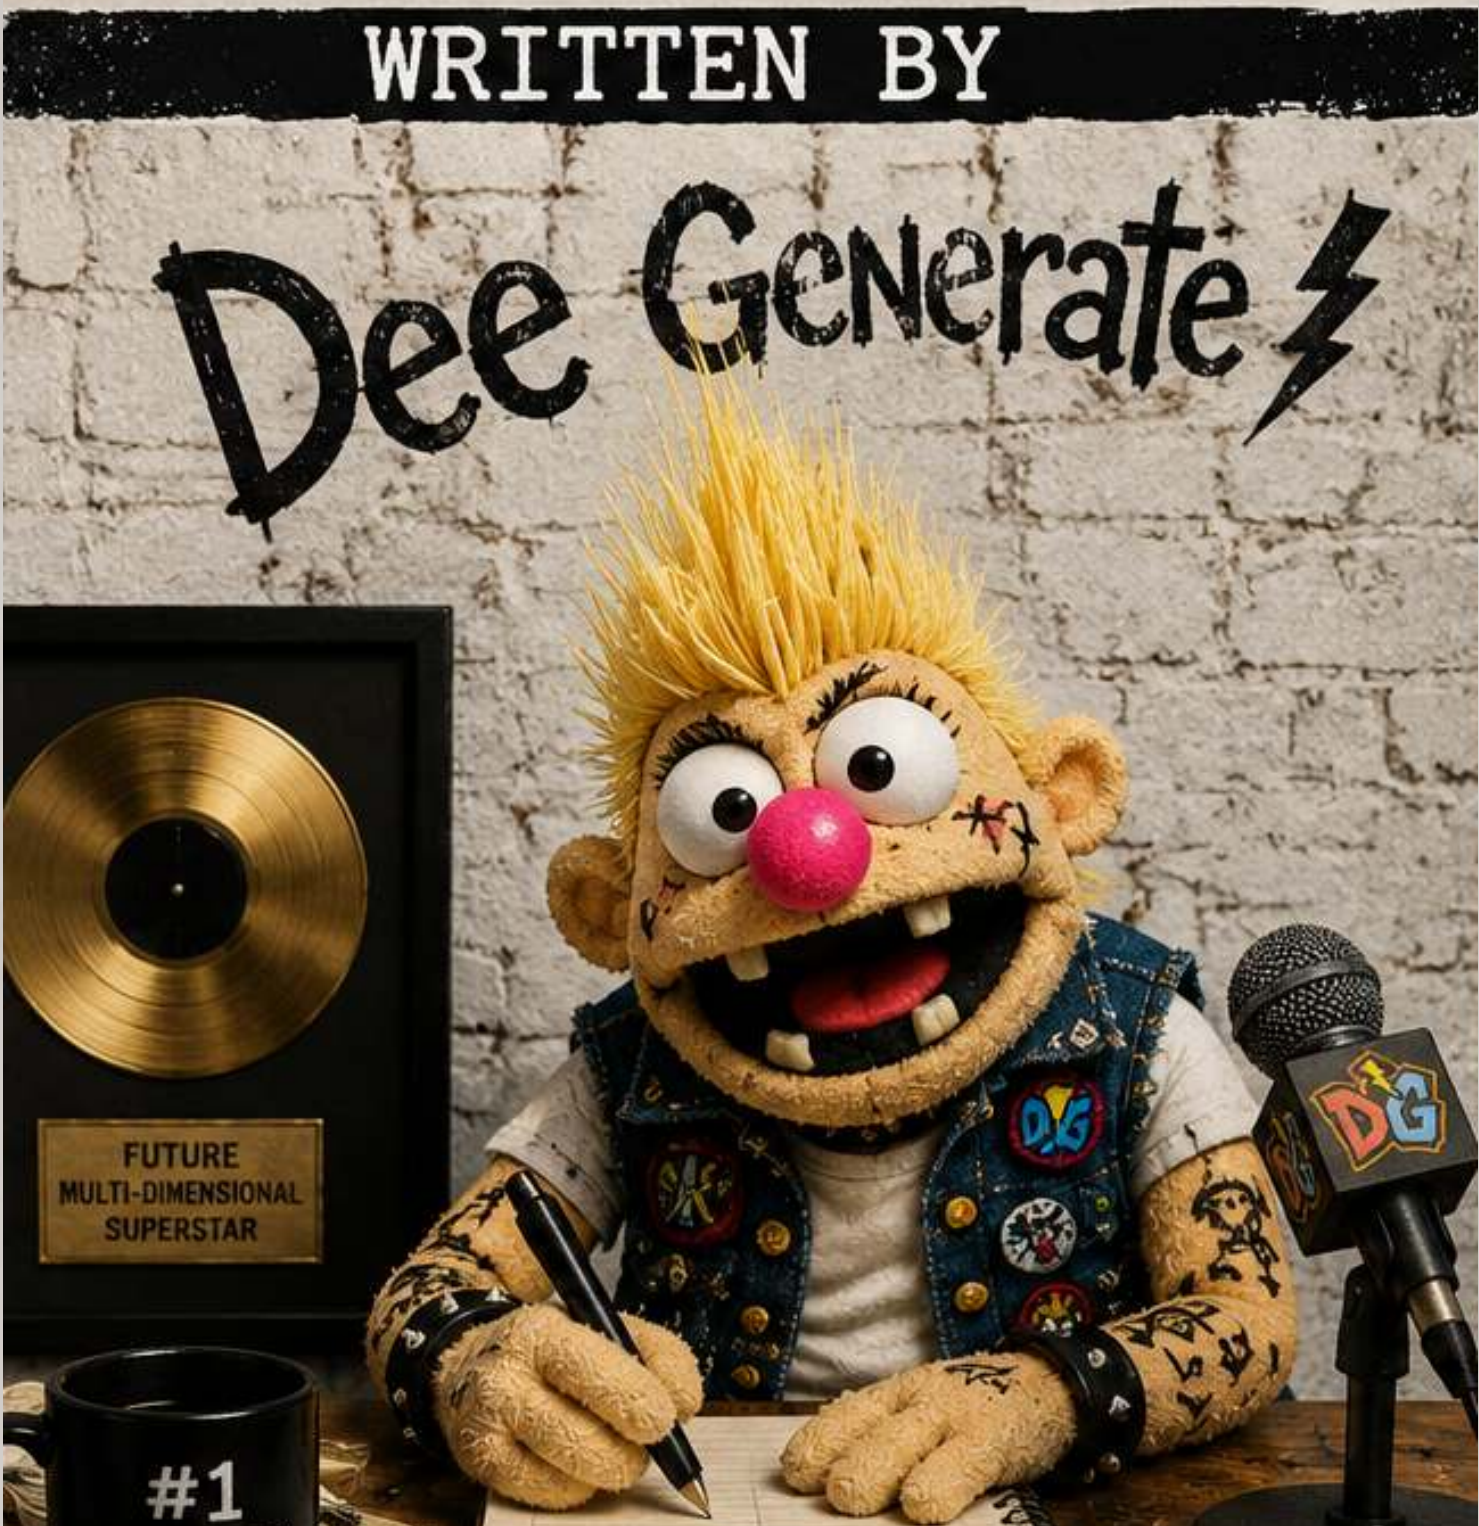

Perhaps more extraordinary is what PAD has stopped saying.

Earlier statements repeatedly described the Green Fog incidents as isolated anomalies. That language is absent from the newest advisory.

For months, investigators have attempted to determine where the interference originated. Following this week's reports, PAD officials are reportedly considering a far more troubling question.

Not where it came from.

How many places has it already reached?

Dee's Second Opinion

By Dee Generate, Verified Celebrity (Self-Certified)

★★★★½

I hate this.

Not the album.

The fact that I like it.

These assholes are weird.

I respect that.

"Bone" is pretty fucking good, too.

ReeB picked that one.

Don't tell him I said that.

Still needs more Dee.

Everything does.

Personal Trainer — Human Assholes

Reviewed by Gregory P. Hawthorne

There is something wonderfully unruly about Human Assholes. Personal Trainer's third album seems almost incapable of traveling in a straight line, wandering through indie rock, slacker pop, alt-country, post-punk, psychedelia and whatever other doorway happens to be open. Yet remarkably, the record never feels like a collection of disconnected experiments. It feels like a band having enough confidence to follow an idea wherever it leads.

Much of that vitality comes from a change in approach. Willem Smit began these songs on acoustic guitar before Personal Trainer recorded together live in the studio, trading meticulous construction for something warmer, looser and more spontaneous. The result is fifteen tracks filled with crooked hooks, sudden stylistic detours, strange instrumentation and moments where apparent chaos snaps unexpectedly into focus.

"Bone" deserves particular mention. ReeB brought Human Assholes to this writer's attention after singling it out as his favorite track, and it proves an excellent doorway into the album's stranger corners. Elsewhere, "Scrambled Egg," "Moping," the sprawling title track and the explosive shifts of "Object Permanence" demonstrate just how difficult Personal Trainer are to comfortably categorize.

Human Assholes is messy, funny, vulnerable, occasionally abrasive and frequently beautiful. More importantly, it sounds alive. In an era when records can be polished until every rough edge disappears, Personal Trainer have made something whose imperfections feel essential to its personality.

Rating: 4½ out of 5 Signals
