Community College vs University

Community College offer two-year Associate degrees and certificates with lower tuition open admissions and smaller classes often acting as a bridge to four-year institutions.

~~Community~~ Universities are typically four year costlier institutions offering bachelor's Masters and PhD degrees with competitive admissions on campus housing and extensive research opportunities.

Degree & Duration: - Community Colleges focus on 2 Years associate degrees or Vocational Certificates, while University focuses on four year bachelor degrees.

Cost: - Community College tuition generally much lower, often allowing students to complete their first two years of general education credits before transforming to a 4 years education leading to degree.

Goal: - Community College often cater to working adults career training, or academic preparation, where as universities focus on specialized academic, and research based education.

Students often choose community Colleges to save money on tuition and lower-level classes with intention of transforming credits to a 4 year University Later Earning a low-cost associate degree from Community College means taking pre requisites for 4 year bachelor degree of the university.
