US Accreditation

Earning an accreditation in the United States is voluntary and non-governmental. The U.S. Department of Education (DOE) and The Council for Higher Education Accreditation (CHEA) are two prominent government and non-government organizations that overseas higher education accreditation in the United States. These organizations are not involved in the actual process of accreditation; rather they provide resources, guideline, and information about accrediting agencies.

The federal government of the USA rules accrediting agencies for the establishment and maintenance of academic and administrative standards. The agencies set its own standard that the institution most meets in order to earn its accreditation. The federal Government DOE (Department of Education) or CHEA (Council for Higher Education Accreditation) reveals standards (Academic and Administrative) set up by the institution to earn accreditation. If they pass the review an accreditation it is an endorsement of their institution as a legitimate institution of Higher Education earning an accreditation in the United States is voluntary and non-government.
