Principal's Message

There are two key factors that point to how well a student will do in school: parent engagement and student attendance.

For decades, researchers have pointed to family involvement in school as the key success factor that transcends nearly all others, including socioeconomic status, student background, or the school the student attends. Parent engagement leads to positive results in academic performance. It's that simple!

One of the most important indicators of student success - and one of the most basic - is attendance. Student can't learn when they aren't in school!

As we continue through the school year, please keep both key factors in mind. Get involved, communicate regularly with your child's teacher, and volunteer as time permits.

Thank you for your continued support and for entrusting your child(ren) with us!
