“Foundations of Health: Essential Nutrients, System Function, and Ethical Client Support” PRESENTED BY Chris Paul, Neighborly Wellness

Charles “Chip” Paul is a systems theorist, researcher, and educator focused on advancing a systems-based understanding of human health. His work integrates biology, environmental inputs, and regulatory processes to better explain how dysfunction develops and how the body maintains balance. With a background in mathematics and executive leadership across telecommunications, biotech, and healthcare, Chip has developed frameworks that connect cellular signaling, mitochondrial function, lipid biology, and environmental influences into a cohesive model of human function. He is the founder of TrueMedX and co-founder of Neighborly Wellness, where he applies these concepts through product development and client education. His work bridges theory, application, and real-world outcomes. Chip is also known for his role in public policy, including authorship of Oklahoma’s medical cannabis law (SQ788), and continues to contribute to national conversations around health policy and regulatory frameworks. A recognized educator and speaker, he has delivered a TEDx talk, contributed to professional publications, and been featured in national media outlets.
