Home Depot Credit Card Account Snapshot

Legacy Account Snapshot

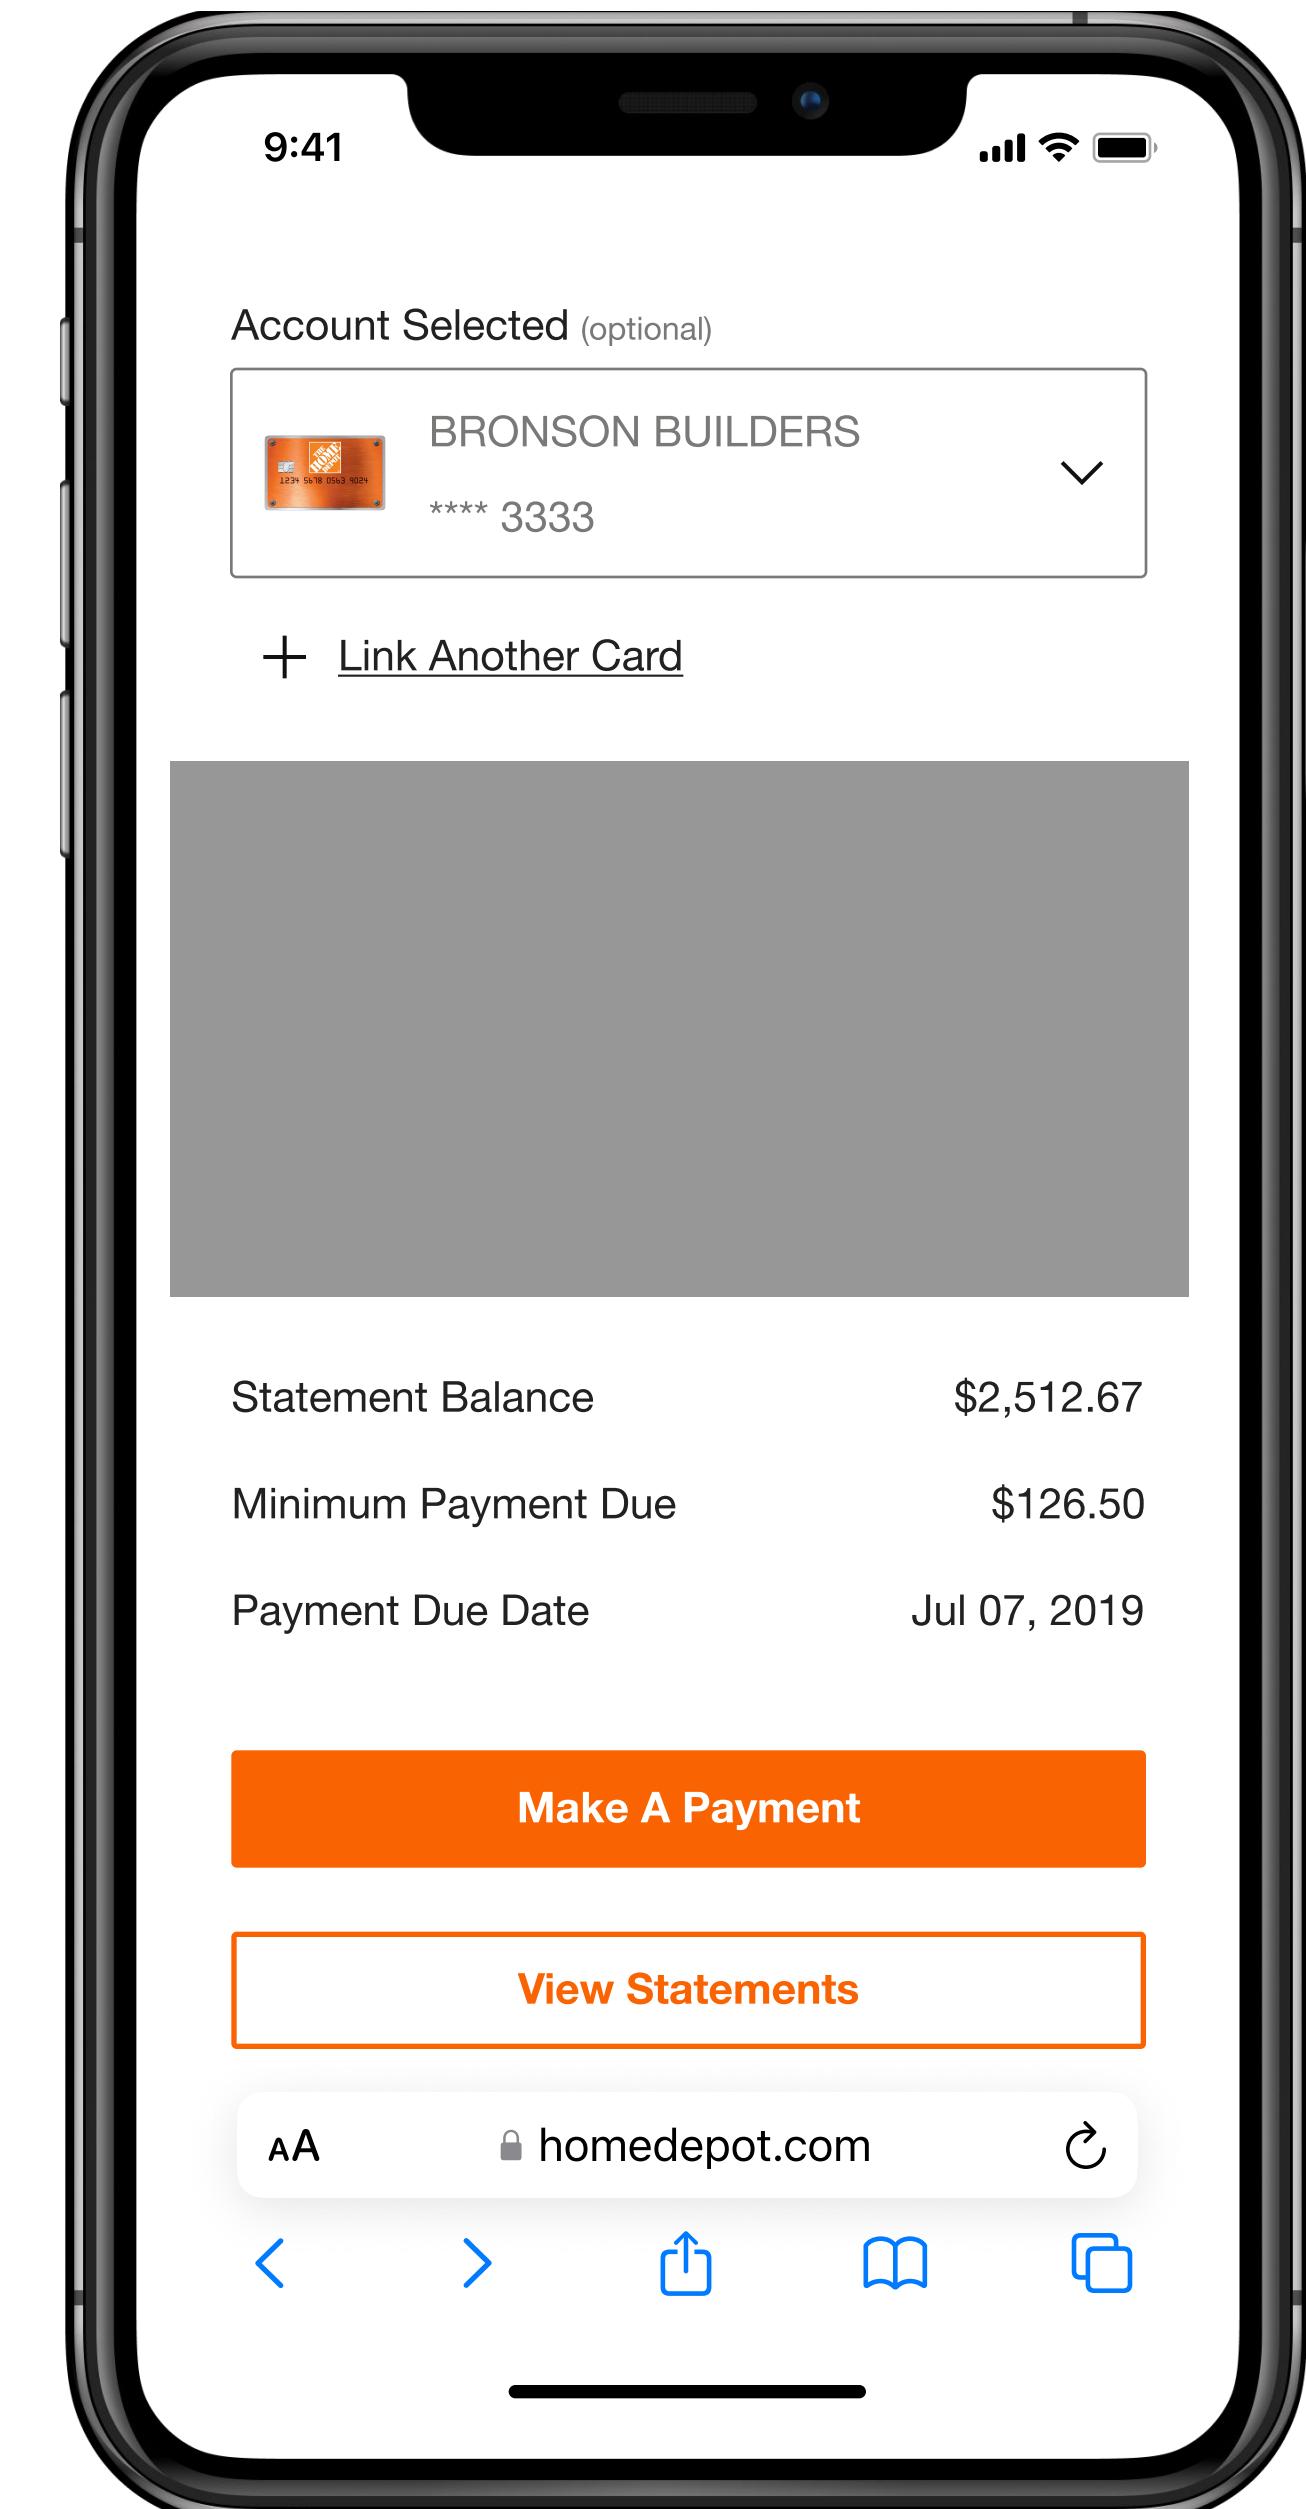

HomeDepot.Com began updating the site and app's UI in order to make the site easier to use.

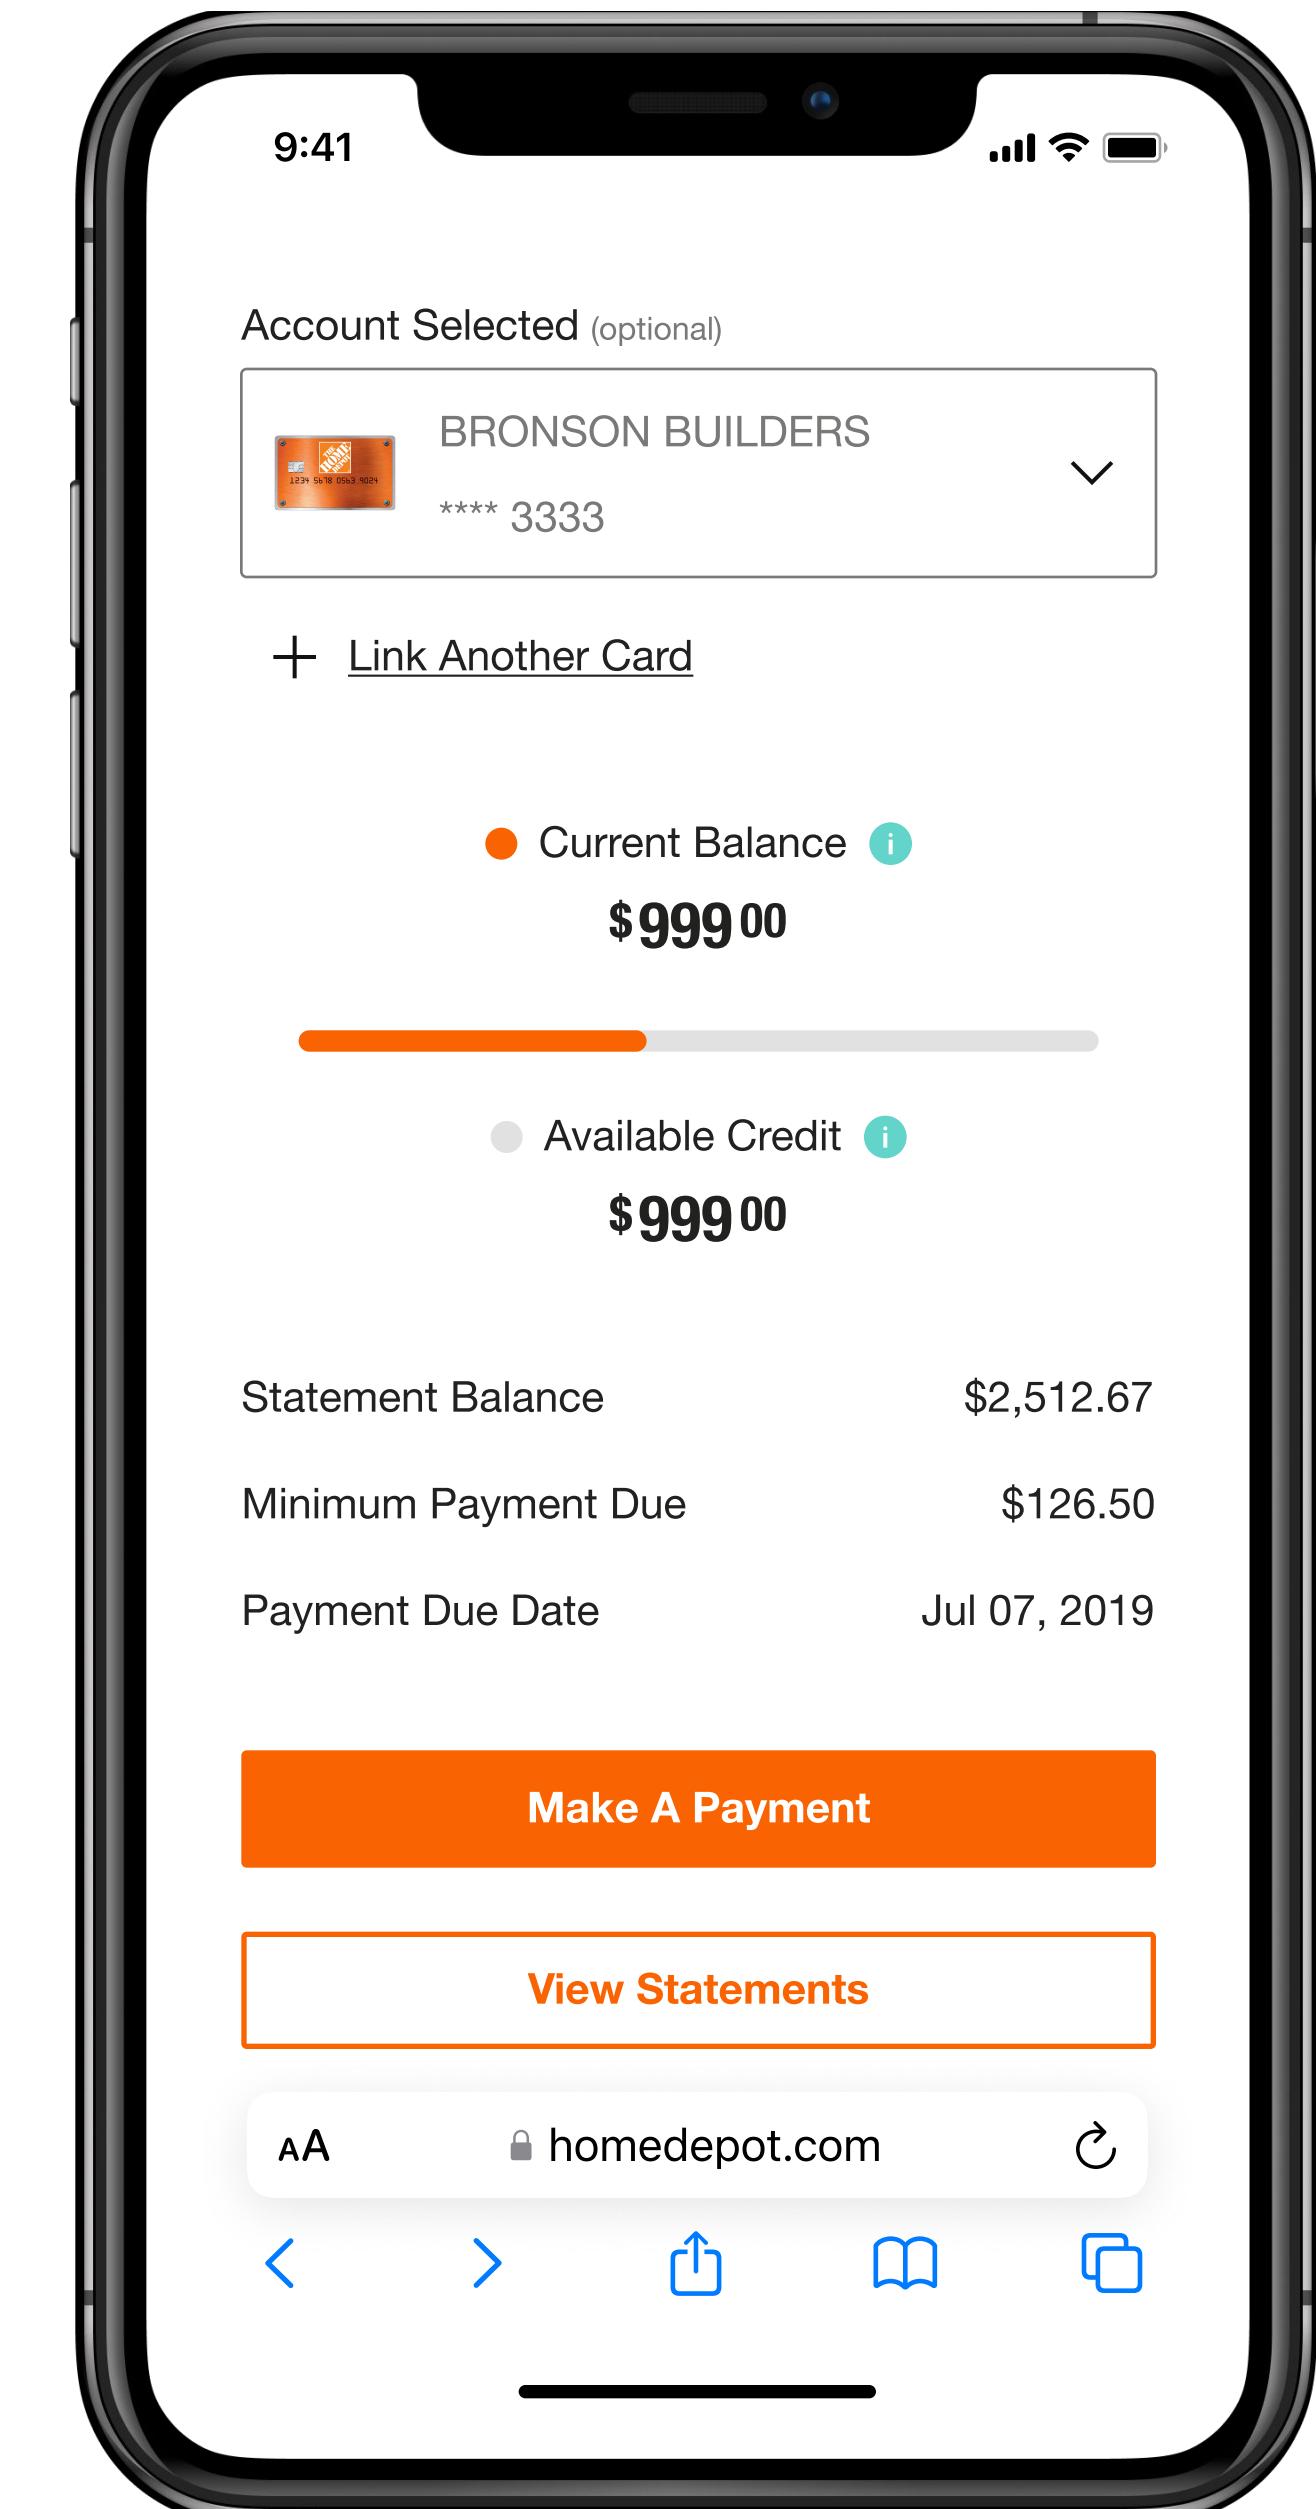

The Home Depot Credit Card Account Snapshot was the first page to be updated.

We began updating the page, but did not have all necessary components as they were not built yet.

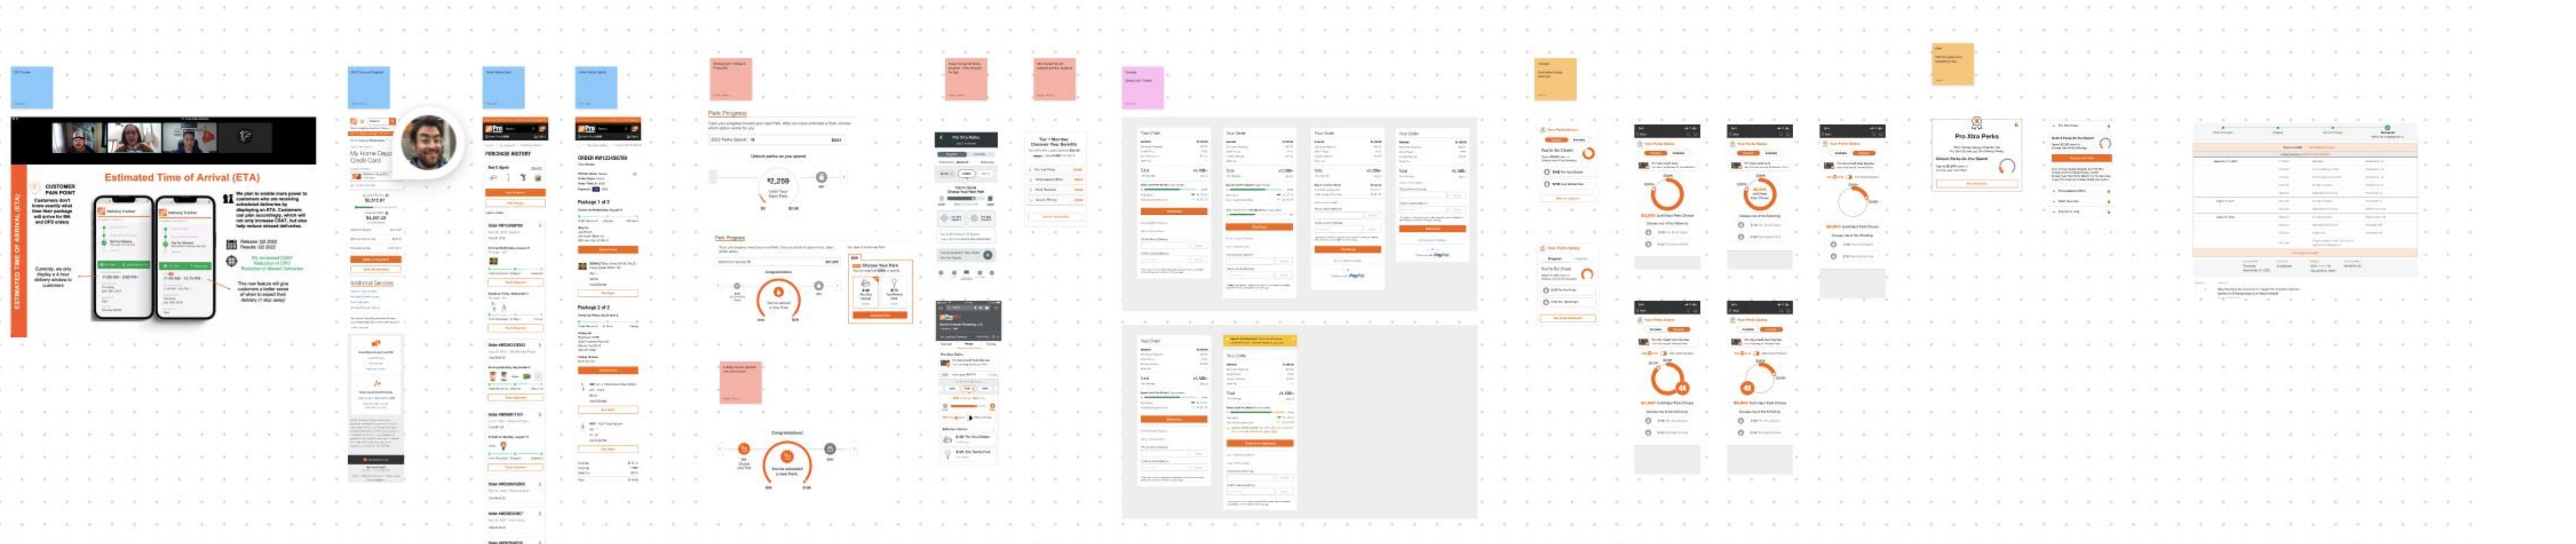

The new UI system lacked a payment tracker

I designed this Intermediate Payment Tracker component based on the existing Delivery Tracker component in our design system, so we could begin development without waiting on the Payment Tracker component.

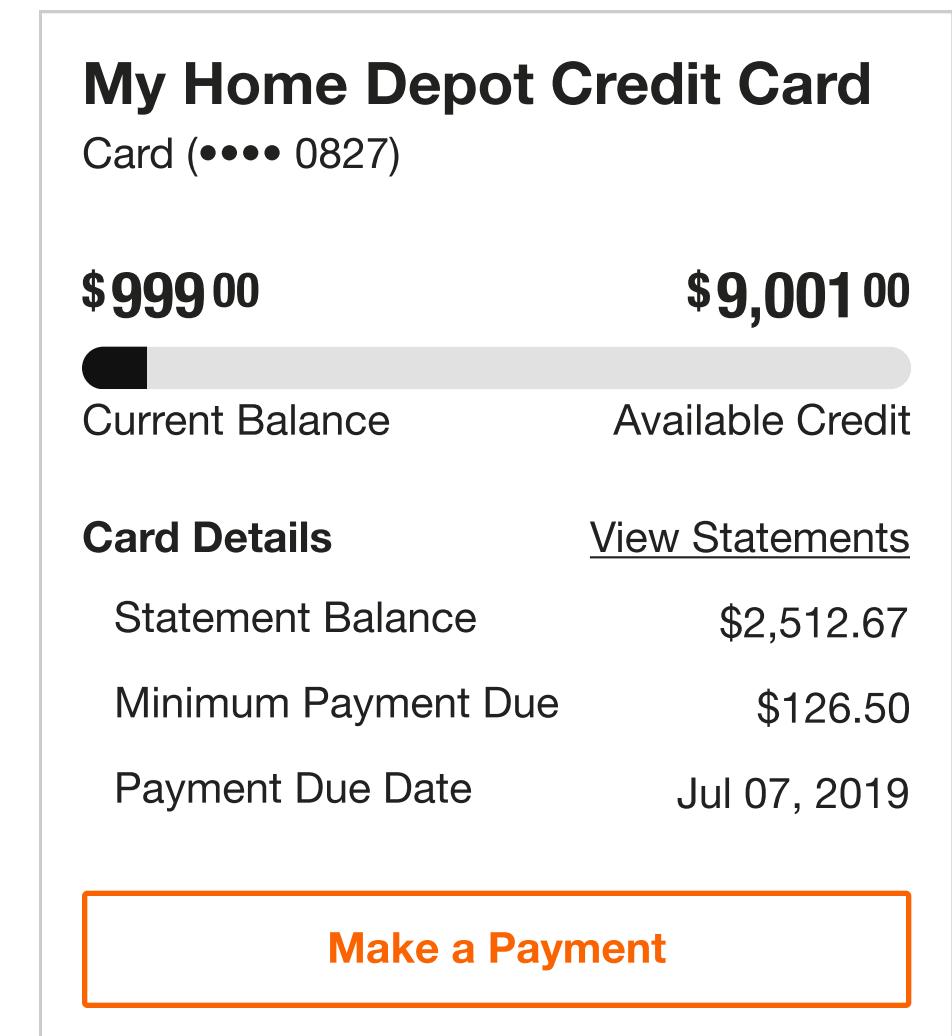

I drove alignment between seven other teams that were also blocked from finishing their designs because they were in need of a tracker component.

We shared our designs with each other in a design session via Miro and then presented our work from the session to the visual Ops team showing an immediate need for a tracker component, which expedited the Beta release of the component.

While I worked on the Account Snapshot Page, our Homepage team worked on a miniature version on a credit card account snapshot “pod.”

I delegated the Homepage team to work on the tracker and it's different states.

While I worked on the Credit Card Account Page, and The Homepage team worked on the “pod.”

I discovered our Loyalty team was also working on a Credit Card Pod for the Loyalty dashboard.

I cancelled the work on the Loyalty Pod, seeing seeing the Homepage team was further along. We would reuse the design and code from the Homepage Pod for the Loyalty Dashboard Pod.

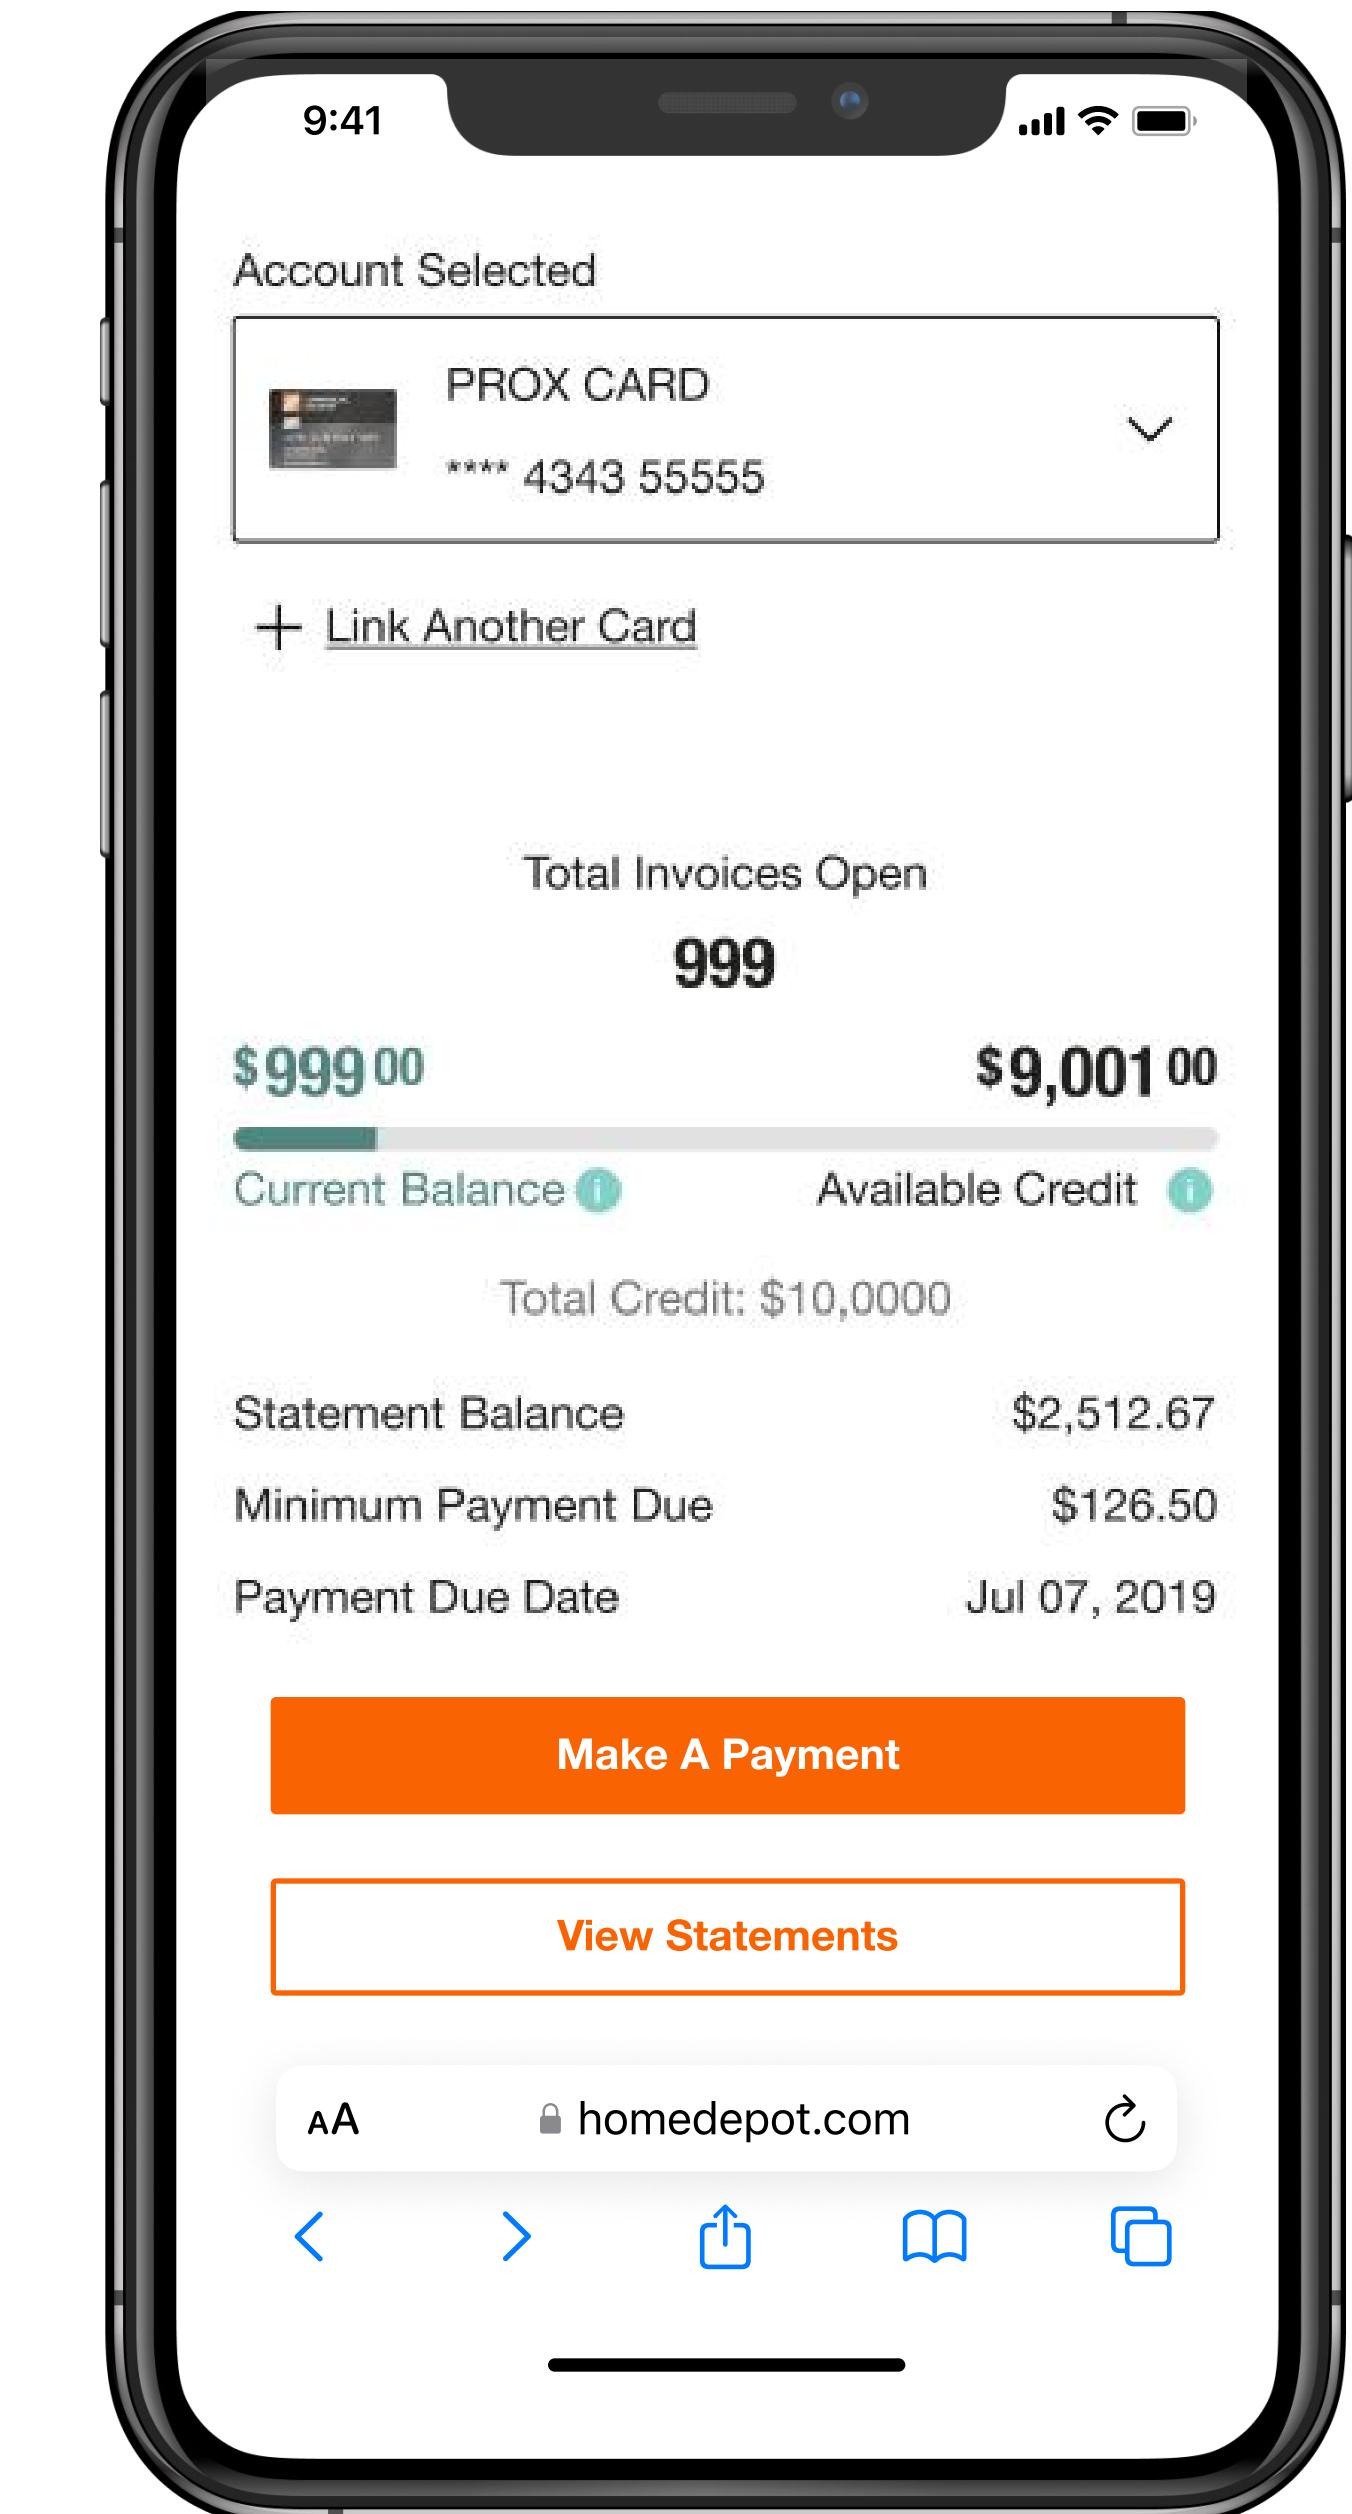

The Homepage Team continued to ideate on the different tracker states, which would now be used across the three Credit Card Snapshot Experiences: Credit Card Account Page, Homepage, and The Loyalty Dashboard

Tracker Ideation

Having the Homepage Team focus on the tracker, allowed me to move forward on redesigning the B2B Credit Card Account Pages.

The B2B pages required additional work due to B2B specific features like proxy account management and the ability for users to export an invoice.
