- Lastly, Darlene authored and published two books. Her last publication was a children's book titled "How Sempre [the big eared Frenchie] learned who has her best interests at heart." Sempre explains the core lesson that parents render decisions in the best interests of their child versus intent to upset the child or deny a request in spite. Sempre helps a child understand when his/her parent(s) say "No" it is out of love, protection, and what would be best for the child. The book weaves additional childhood lessons such as the importance of family, sibling kindness, the truth always comes out, lying consequences, failure to listen may cause unforeseen harmful consequences, the thrill of exploring, how parents protect and love their child, and more.
