

Paper: Attacking the Children – Round III \(additional information\)

Date: 14 Feb 2023 (rev. 17 Jun 2024)

Topic: As per the noted Paper above, there is a misguided group of individuals who are minions for the global elite, and who are insidiously imposing damage by gender dysphoria, on the children in North America. LifeSiteNews has been brave enough to call a spade a spade on this issue. This is important due to the psychological component noted in this main Paper. Here are a couple of more experiential reports, that mainstream media will never report:

Gender-confused teens committed suicide after receiving trans hormones from researchers

Researchers cherry-picked data, according to one social science journalist.

Wed Feb 8, 2023 - 2:10 pm EST

CHICAGO (LifeSiteNews) — Two gender-confused teens on hormones as part of a children’s hospital study committed suicide, the latest evidence of the dangers of injecting kids with drugs to affirm their delusions about being able to change their sex.

A recent paper published in the New England Journal of Medicine looked at 315 gender-confused teens who were given “gender-affirming hormones” as part of a study conducted by numerous researchers, with many affiliated with the controversial Lurie Children’s Hospital and Northwestern University’s transgender programs. Both receive millions of dollars from the wealthy and powerful Pritzker family, which counts the governor of Illinois and the former Secretary of Commerce among its ranks.

One researcher, Amy Tishelman, is affiliated with Boston College, a Jesuit Catholic university. The Catholic Church opposes gender ideology and the idea that a man can become a woman and vice versa.

“The most common adverse event was suicidal ideation (in 11 participants [3.5%]); death by suicide occurred in 2 participants,” a note on the paper states.

The study drew criticism from Jesse Singal, a social science journalist who wrote an essay explaining the flaws in the paper, which claimed to find benefits to injecting kids with drugs to help them pretend to be the opposite sex.

Singal argued that the research team cherry-picked the data, noting that the paper left out various outcomes it hoped to study, as disclosed in initial paperwork.

He wrote:

If you compare that to the protocol document, you’ll notice that of the eight key variables the researchers were most interested in — “gender dysphoria, depression, anxiety, trauma symptoms, self-injury, suicidality, body esteem, and quality of life” — the ones I bolded are not reported in the NEJM paper. That’s six out of eight, or 75% of the variables covered by the researchers’ hypothesis in their protocol document

He called it “borderline misleading” for the researchers to claim that “there were significant within-participant changes over time for all psychosocial outcomes in hypothesized directions.”

“This is borderline misleading. By ‘all’ psychosocial outcomes, they don’t mean all the ones they measured and evaluated for change over time — they mean the ones they chose to report results on,” Singal wrote.

Transgender research regularly is flawed, ignores contrary opinions

Research into medical standards for “gender-affirming care,” which falsely claims that individual can change their sex, continues to be plagued by low standards. It also ignores opinions from credentialed medical experts whom have warned about the harms of transgenderism.

For example, a study by a paid advocate for the LGBT lobby tried to debunk the idea of a “social contagion” behind the rapid increase in transgender identification.

However, Jack Turban’s research was called a “disaster” by one social science journalist, while Catholic University of America business and research methods professor Michael New told LifeSiteNews the paper used flawed research. The LGBT advocate relied on surveys that had confusing questions about “sex,” particularly if someone believed they were the opposite sex than they were. Turban also did not interview any gender dysphoric individuals for his study.

“In a field known for its weak methodologies and even weaker scientific conclusions, Turban’s study sets a new low,” Leor Sapir, with the Manhattan Institute, wrote in response to the paper.

Trans ideology left runaway gender-confused teen prey to sex traffickers and rapists: report

The report has already sparked legislative effort to ensure that no family is ever denied guardianship rights because of alleged 'misgendering.'

Mon Jan 23, 2023 - 5:05 pm EST

(LifeSiteNews) — A 14-year-old Virginia runaway was abandoned to a horrific fate of rape and human trafficking after government officials reportedly refused to return her to her home because her family allegedly didn't support her transgender identity, according to a bombshell investigative report by the Daily Wire.

The report has already sparked legislative effort to ensure that no family is ever denied guardianship rights because of alleged "misgendering."

Legal documents reviewed by the outlet indicate the girl had been adopted by her grandmother after the death of her father. Identified in records as "Sage," the "long troubled" girl later wanted to be called "Draco" and treated as a boy.

In August 2021, Sage reportedly ran away from home to Baltimore, Maryland to meet up with a person she met online and believed to be a 16-year-old boy. According to the report, however, the "boy" was really a 36-year-old "sex offender who had been grooming her online and took her to Washington and then to Baltimore."

After a weeklong search, federal and state law enforcement officials rescued Sage from convicted sex offender Kenneth Fisher, who had reportedly raped her and "trafficked her to so many men that Sage lost count," Sage's grandmother Michele Blair wrote in a victim impact statement.

Despite rescuing her, however, records indicate that officials refused to return her to her grandmother.

Baltimore Assistant Public Defender Aneesa Khan reportedly pleaded with the court not to return the girl to her guardians, allegedly arguing that Sage's biological relatives weren't supportive of her "trans" identity.

On September 3, 2021, Judge Robert B. Kershaw wrote that it was "not possible to return the child to that home," instead authorizing the Baltimore City Department of Juvenile Services to place her in a "therapeutic facility" that would make "reasonable accommodation for [Sage's] expressed male gender and desire to live as a trans male."

The victimized girl's grandmother later said she had been "blindsided by the accusations of transphobia" from the court. She said she wasn't even aware her granddaughter wanted to be called by a male name "until hours before she ran away, because school officials had concealed it from her," the Daily Wire reported.

In November, Judge Kershaw said that despite an Appomattox County Department of Social Services finding that the girl had not suffered abuse or neglect at the hands of her legal guardians, "This Court finds that Draco [sic] has more likely than not endured emotional abuse and neglect by his [sic] parents.”

A complaint later filed by Sage’s grandmother against Khan contends that the public defender had coached the teen “to lie about being abused by her parents, seemingly in order to create a legal precedent allowing states — other than where a teen lives — to refuse to return a runaway teen if transgender issues are in play,” the Daily Wire reported.

In consequence of Khan’s appeal and the judge’s decision, Sage was placed in a facility “with some of Baltimore’s most troubled biological males.”

But records reviewed by the outlet indicate that the Baltimore facility wasn’t the end of Sage’s tragic story.

Months later, Sage reportedly ran away from one of the institutions in which she had been housed and turned up in Texas. Documents indicate that Sage had once again been “allegedly trafficked to pedophiles” in the Lone Star State.

The State Police of Texas Human Trafficking Division reportedly found Sage on January 24, 2022.

“Unlike Maryland, Texas authorities immediately returned the frightened girl to her parents,” the Daily Wire reported.

During the trip home, Sage reportedly spoke about her horrific experiences, leading her grandmother to file an ethics complaint against the public defender who had allegedly prompted Sage to lie about being abused at home.

After her rescue, Sage went to a Virginia treatment facility per a court order.

Even there, however, she wouldn’t be safe from “woke” ideology.

According to Virginia mom and former Democrat Capitol Hill staffer Laura Hanford, who helped raise money and secure legal representation for Sage, the institution had urged the girl to persist with her “transgender” identity and get a mastectomy.

However, the girl reportedly began asking her grandmother to bring her girls’ clothes when she visited.

Hanford, an international human rights advocate, told the Daily Wire that she’s focused on helping “vulnerable minorities that are persecuted by authoritarian governments,” adding that that’s exactly how she views Sage’s situation.

“Children are being abused by people who see themselves as compassionate but implement policies that amount to a welcome mat for predators,” she said.

In June 2022, after 20 months of ordeal, Sage was finally released from the treatment facility and allowed to go home.

Sage's discharge paperwork reportedly "shows no diagnosis of gender dysphoria" indicating that she no longer identifies as male.

Meanwhile, lawmakers are already taking notice of the case.

On Friday, the Daily Wire reported that Virginia State Delegate Dave LaRock introduced "Sage's Law" in an effort to ensure that no parent is ever again accused of child abuse for calling their trans-identifying child by their correct pronouns.

Closing notes on the intentional creation of gender dysphoria in young children -

1) The distribution of pornography (occurring in schools now) to those under the age of 18 IS STILL A CRIMINAL OFFENCE IN CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES! Find this material in your schools, gather the evidence and demand that criminal charges be laid upon all those who condone and distribute this material.

2) Get educated on the tactics used to infiltrate our kids lives, such as the use of syllogisms. See the main Paper – "Attacking the Children..." www.rebuildthenation.ca

3) Take your kids out of school and form your own learning pods with very small groups in someone's living room and/or link up with various sites to formalize the learning experience for your local area. Taking the kids out of school defunds the school itself – if the staff do not have the common sense, morality, ethics or integrity to do the right thing, why would anybody support them!!

4) The government is the minion over controller for the globalist elite in the destruction of our children and grandchildren. Do the research if you deny this claim. Therefore, the defunding of the government will serve to take our children back from not only this criminal offence, but will save them from other insidious practices, like claiming that myocarditis & strokes are "normal for children" now!

The coming of Light and Life for our planet is an imminent Reality at some point... we still need to do our part to fully usher it into place!
