

The Evolution of a False Notion: Germ Theory

The Initial Premise, Initial Correction, Final Correction & Demise 1546 to 2024

The Initial Premise

The initial premise of “infectious microorganisms travelling through the air” was put forward in Venice, Italy, 1546.

The period that followed that, up to 1866, included the promotion of this unfounded theory and the introduction of the practice of ‘variolation’ spearheaded by Edward Jenner (late 1700s to early 1800s).

Moving forward to the introduction of the practice of ‘vaccination’ in the early 1800s, there became somewhat of a battle between the two false notions, of how to eradicate the theory of a ‘contagious’ transfer of air-borne microorganisms.

The mantle of this still unproven theory was taken up by Louis Pasteur into the latter 1800s and included his invention of the word ‘microbe’ [1863] to satisfy the theory.

Details of the period of these events, by way of 696 pages can be found in William White’s book, “The Story of a Great Delusion”, published in 1885:

The Initial Correction - 1866

The technical end of the “germ theory” came in 1866 when Professor Pierre Jacques Antoine Bechamp & Professor/Surgeon Alfred Estor registered their findings to the French Academy of Sciences & Medicine – Comptes Rendus.

Among the findings that came from the team of research, led by Prof. Bechamp includes:

- a. the discovery of the fundamental particle of (all) biology, the microzyma,
- b. this discovery was made with the assistance of the “Nachet Inverted Compound Monocular Microscope” from C.S. Nachet,
- c. the discovery of the pleomorphic characteristics of this microorganism, into bacteria,
- d. the microzyma is ubiquitous, both within the body and without, and is generated intracellularly,
- e. one of the proofs documented was the finding of bacteria in the centre of a piece of (isolated) meat, denouncing the “exogenous” nature as proposed by Pasteur, and fully aligning with the evidence of the presence of endogenously created microzymas (by way of pleomorphism).

What followed over the next 158 years (from the 1866 registration) was a series of regular confirmations of Bechamp’s original work on this fundamental particle of all biology. It is noted that each time this fundamental entity was re-discovered, it was also renamed – this being the result of the suppression of all the previous discoverer’s work:

- 1872-1968 – Gunther Enderlein – “The Protit”
- 1897-1957 – Wilhelm Reich – “The Bion”
- 1924-2018 – Gaston Naessens* – “The Somatid”
- latest entry of truth (current) – purposely anonymous – University of Queensland – “The Nanobe”

So we see that the “initial correction” or assertion of evidenced based truth on the fundamentals of biology, was more than well supported by various independent followup re-discoveries. Most notably in this string was Gaston Naessens, where he not only identified the characteristics and origins of this fundamental particle (including the pleomorphic nature), but also, by way of his genuine expertise in creating the ‘Somatoscope’, was able to expand on the pleomorphic process, and show the development into a 16 stage cycle – the outcomes of the pleomorphic effect (see texts noted above).

The Final Correction & Demise (of the still ‘theoretical’ germ theory)

With the passing of Gaston Naessens in 2018 and the newer confirmation out of the University of Queensland, we come to the 4-year “covid” era (March 2020 to present).

These 4 years are starkly marked by the emergence of truth – truth that was rarely previously even thought of. Even the difference between April 2020 and what is occurring as of the writing of this paper (26 March 2024), is astounding, in that there are legions of individuals who, to a greater or lesser degree, understand that the “infectious bugs in the air” theory, is a complete hoax. Many of these individuals are going by their intuitive sense and some also with their life experience on the matter. When one views their several decades experience of life on planet Earth, from an alternative viewpoint of truth (rather than the programmed viewpoint they possessed all these years), confirmation is distinctly available, in many, many cases. In this way, folks are retroactively & truthfully re-defining their own history.

Many indicators tell us currently, that 2024 is the year of disclosure. This is simply a sign of an enhancement of truth, that was initiated first in 2012 and then in March of 2020. This disclosure will continue as more and more individuals come to realize that there are problems, with many things, that we have been led to believe, since our childhood days.

This is no less applicable with the notion of what has been promulgated as “infectious contagion” by “microbes/viruses” being present as exogenous pathogens. A profitable lie.

Conclusion

The conclusion is self-evident.

Fear of ‘germs in the air’ is falsehood.

All falsehood is going down by self-annihilation, soon.

Truth brings peace & freedom.

[It always has and always will.]

This time its permanent.
