November 21, 2021, AmericanWritingAwards.com announced the winners and finalists of the inaugural American Writing Awards in 42 different literary categories. Awards were presented for fiction & nonfiction titles published in 2019, 2020 and 2021, along with Legacy titles which are older than 3 years.

The American Writing Awards Team had this to say about the competition.

“The number and quality of books entered into our first ever contest surpassed any and all expectations. Entries came in from all over the world and were narrowed down by our judges to the final results. We can’t wait to see the books we get to read for next year. We love doing what we do!

We are a grassroots creation, which means we were created by authors for authors. Our mission is simple, to offer the most inclusive and affordable premier book competition for Independent authors and publishers—providing an avenue of recognition and pride all over the world. An American Writing Award is a perfect promotional vessel to launch careers, open markets, and permanently build credibility as a writer.”
