Substance Use Disorder (SUD)

Substance Use Disorder does not discriminate and can affect anyone in any community. The Center for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) reported that more than 100,000 people lost their lives due to unintentional overdose and the total number of individuals who have overdosed and survived is an even high number. The struggle is real and continues to affect many people unnecessarily.

Rather than depicting SUD as a moral failure of weakness or lack of willpower, we are now aware of the greater context and can embrace the humanity of the person who struggles with SUD instead of blaming and shaming them. We can move beyond our old ways of thinking, our punitive beliefs, attitudes, and language that promotes stigma.

As we honor each person's journey, we promote healing and hope rather than disconnection and judgement. We should acknowledge there are multiple pathways to recovery and strive to reduce risk factors to promote better health and community engagement. We assume that people want to get better and not be miserable. Extend grace and the opportunity for anyone struggling with substance use disorder to be accepted where they are without stigma and judgement.
