

Biography
Alison Keogh 2021

"...Keogh's work brings to mind both the spontaneity of the Abstract Expressionist painters and the geometric rigor of Donald Judd." - Ann Landi, ARTnews Magazine July 2012

Alison Keogh earned her architectural degree and completed a masters program at Kingston University, London. Formerly an architect, her artistic practice embraces repetitive and contemplative processes as a way of collaborating with natural materials. While adhering to an underlying structural premise of modernist forms her work emanates an organic sensibility.

Keogh's work has been exhibited internationally as well as nationally in solo and group exhibitions. In 2012 she exhibited at the Center for Contemporary Arts, Santa Fe, and attended an artist residency at Fundacion Valpariso, Spain. She was represented by William Siegal Gallery, Santa Fe for five years until the closure of contemporary program in 2017. Alison exhibited at Gallery Moris, Kobe, Japan in the spring of 2018.

Alison is part of the group show, "Breath Taking", which opened March 2021 at the New Mexico Museum of Art in Santa Fe after a year of pandemic closure.
