Multidisciplinary Creative Producer | Broadcaster | Herbalist | Author | Publisher

Steve Azor is a Haitian-American author, independent publisher, broadcaster, producer, and multidisciplinary creative whose career spans nearly four decades in music, film, entertainment, entrepreneurship, and cultural production.

Raised in East Elmhurst, Queens, New York, Azor began his entertainment career in 1988. His professional experience encompasses work as a dancer, DJ, music producer, entertainment host, restaurant owner, photographer, videographer, cinematographer, and director. His early screen work includes Stay Tuned (1992), while his contributions to music have connected him with artists including Salt-N-Pepa, Kwamé, Dana Dane, Antoinette, Sweet Tee, and Kid 'n Play.

Azor is the creator and producer of Ayiti Deploge (2008), a live showcase and broadcasting platform centered on Haitian music, culture, and entertainment that develops unsigned artists while inviting established and legendary artists to the stage. His cultural production work also includes Runway Haiti (2011), a fashion show production launched in Haiti to promote local designers and models that has since expanded to Florida and New York.

Beyond entertainment and media, Azor is a practicing herbalist who studied with Herbal Bush House. His interest in herbal health reflects his broader commitment to knowledge, self-reliance, wellness, and community.

As the founder of Azor Publishing, he brings decades of professional experience and cultural observation to the literary world. His debut book, Managed By Design: How Systemic Patterns Undermine Black Sovereignty, examines recurring patterns within institutions and systems of power, encouraging readers to question established narratives and consider the structures that influence ownership, control, and self-determination.

Through his work as an author and publisher, Azor seeks to encourage critical thinking, thoughtful questioning, and meaningful conversations about history, culture, sovereignty, and the systems that shape society.
