Herd: Fleece Your Friends is here!

What weighs 380 pounds and is a ton of fun? The shipment I just received from BoDa Manufacturing!
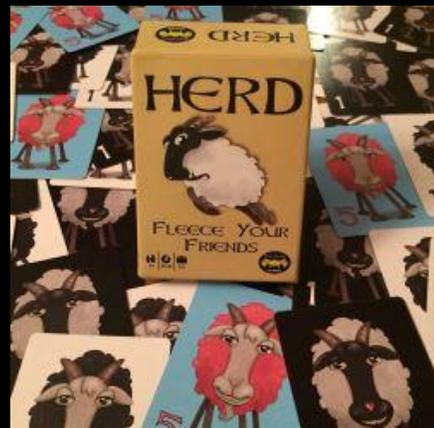

1000 units of Herd: Fleece Your Friends have just been delivered. Shipping to KS backers will begin very soon. We are still on schedule to make our estimated September deliveries.

The Magic Helmet Games website has been updated: www.magichelmetgames.com

Our website is now a fully functional e-commerce site. If you know someone who would like to pre-order Herd: Fleece Your Friends, please refer them to: www.magichelmetgames.com

As soon as the KS backers have received their rewards, I will begin shipping pre-orders and selling in real time.

DiceTowerCon

If you like to play tabletop games and you are planning to be in the Orlando, Florida area around the Fourth of July, then DiceTowerCon is for you. The game library is amazing and the attendees are welcoming and fun. The main gaming hall and library are open 24 hours during the event.

Attendance topped 3,000 this year, but DiceTowerCon will be managed by a different party next year, so some changes are in the works. Attendance is expected to be capped at around 1800 for next year's event and the venue is going to change. The event does tend to sell out so get your badges early. Check out their website for updates.

GenCon

GenCon is big. This year attendance was at 70,000. GenCon is like a tradeshow mixed with a gaming con. For new designer/publishers like me, it's a great venue to make connections and market your product. But I have to admit, it was pretty cool to play a bunch of board games on the field of Lucas Oil Stadium.

The Exhibit Hall was packed with nearly 550 exhibitors, ranging from big companies like CMON and Paizo to small publishers like Facade Games.

Every serious gamer should make the pilgrimage to GenCon at least once.

Next time:
Another Herd update!
Also:
Do you like to eat, drink, and play games, but not do the dishes? I hit the road and take a look at a few Florida gaming pubs.