Professional Statement

I am a PhD student in Social Work, adjunct professor, and clinician committed to advancing equity, inclusion, and access through research, education, and direct practice. My work centers on helping people take ownership of their choices, clarify what matters, and build authentic, values-based relationships. I strive to equip students and clients alike with practical tools to overcome personal and systemic barriers. I advocate for policies and practices that reflect humility, self-determination, and social justice—not as abstract ideals, but as actionable commitments. At this point in my life, I’ve lived enough life to know what matters: empowering others, amplifying voices that are too often ignored, and bringing people together to push past the noise and toward something real.
