Bullying: Breaking the Culture of Conflict

No student should ever feel "alone."

In schools across the country, a troubling culture of conflict often takes root. When asked why they intimidate or harass their peers, many students offer a chillingly simple answer: "Because we can." It's time to change that narrative. Join us for a powerful, eye-opening traditional discipline and build a community of true belonging.

What We'll Explore:

This isn't just a discussion on rules—it's a deep dive into the psychology of connection and the mechanics of change.

- The Power of Recognition: Discover why name validation and "seeing" the invisible child are the most potent tools in a peacemaker's arsenal.
- The "Why" Behind the Behavior: We look at the raw reality of student conflict, moving past "zero tolerance" clichés to understand what actually stops the cycle of violence.
- Connecting the Disconnected: From suspensions and detentions to leadership and outreach, we evaluate which resources truly bridge the gap between a student and their school community.
- The Success of Validation: Learn the proven methods used to train students to recognize and advocate for those who have no one to speak for them.

Why This Matters Now

Bullying thrives in isolation. By breaking the "Culture of Conflict," we do more than just stop a fight—we dismantle the idea that students can hurt others simply "because they can." Through evocative film, candid discussion, and expert insight, this workshop challenges participants to answer one vital question: In a world of limited resources, where should we place the most importance to ensure no child feels alone?

Let's begin the work of making our schools—and our communities—whole again.
