Veraz 2015

D.O.: Campo de Borja
Wine Type: Young Red wine
Variety: 100% Garnacha
Ageing: N/A
Alcohol: 14 %

The vineyards used for this wine have a continental climate influenced by the Atlantic ocean in winter, causing a cold and dry typical North-western wind known in the region as "Cierzo", and by the Mediterranean in the summer. The grapes come from the best pagos planted with the oldest Garnacha vines. The vineyards used for this wine, 10-15 years old, are located in the areas known as Collado and Lomas Altas at an altitude of 300-400 meters above sea level. Yields are 2-2.5 Kg per vine.

The soil that prevails is brown-calcareous and terraced with medium levels of stones, giving good drainage and fair levels of organic matter, rich in nutrients. On the other hand, next to the Moncayo mountains, the soil is clay-ferrous and much more stony. In general, this peculiar soil and climate give this wines a special character.

Stainless steel fermented.

PRODUCTION: 4,000 cases for the U.S.

" Bright purple. Expressive dark berry and floral scents and flavors show good clarity and a hint of jamminess. Emphatically fruity wine with a supple texture and no tannins to get in the way of easy drinking. Excellent value here."
