

The Case

“I am part of that power which eternally wills evil and eternally works good” — Goethe, Faust.

If there are no adults around, what are they interested in doing together?

“When I was thirteen, I already knew all about sex, amphetamines and Chinese salts, didn't you?” said Grey Piggy and winked at Mary Fox.

Red Wolf continued the theme by exhaling sharply from his vape pipe into John Rabbit's face.

It may have sounded rude when Red Wolf muttered through his teeth: “You guys are just mental, aren't you? You don't need to go back to first grade school. You need to start inclusive education from kindergarten.”

Mary Fox replied to the Grey Piggy, “You think I'm an insubstantial girl and don't know anything about sex? When I was thirteen, I already talked about such things in confession to my priest.”

And John Rabbit apparently decided to support his friend Mary Fox and continued to smile, “Yes, of course. Nobody loves children like a real pedophile, especially if he's your priest.”

Red Wolf, looking incredulously alternately at Mary Fox and John Rabbit, began muttering unintelligible swear words.

He said loudly to the whole forest, “All right, we heard you, tell us please, would you like to switch partners with us?”

Mary Fox's face turned from red to purple and scarlet, showing how embarrassed she was to hear it so loudly right now.

But she held her breath and then inhaled the air like a beached fish and accepted the challenge thrown to her.

Mary Fox replied, “I'm always up for it! But we're in the woods now, and obviously there are going to be hygiene issues here.

I'd prefer to shower first, and I don't have any condoms with me, since John Rabbit and I don't use those rubber products.”

Red Wolf smiled gloatingly as he realized that Mary Fox had fallen for his ruse and was ready to get intimate with him by cheating on her close friend John Rabbit.

It was this determination of the girls at their school that the Red Wolf liked so much, and for the sake of Mary Fox's one-time use, he started this conversation between his classmates on the way home from school.

John Rabbit became aware that there was a 'here and now' between them, and became paler and sadder than usual.

Moreover, he was afraid that this ‘one-time contract’ between Mary Fox and Red Wolf could have serious consequences.

For one thing, Red Wolf was famous as the most ‘contact’ guy in the history of their school. After all, in his fifteen years, he has already ‘contacted’ almost every ‘adult girl’ in their school. This is the same girl who, as a teenager, has already grown to ‘adult love relationships’.

Moreover, it is widely acknowledged in the school that Red Wolf does not employ 'rubber protection', even for financial gain, when establishing 'high relationships'.

But John Rabbit showed real stoicism, he smiled silently while looking Grey Piggy in the eyes.

It could not be said that John Rabbit had dreamed all his childhood of a romantic encounter with Grey Piggy, or of an outbreak of childish innocent passion between them.

The fact that he was to undergo a ritual initiation into the 'school aristocrats' also required humility towards Grey Piggy's 'body positivity'.

The exchange of partners was a complex mésalliance between two pairs of adolescents in the hierarchy of school castes, classes, and estates.

These school peculiarities in their diversity are never discussed by teachers for various obvious reasons, so the children feel rather than rationalize it — the constant 'sexual diversity'.

Red Wolf and Grey Piggy, who belong to the upper class of the school's children, thus habitually display their irresistible charm of school aristocracy.

While the lower class love, a couple of 'exotic animals' Mary Fox and John Rabbit were thus gaining admission through the 'abolition of conventional morality' to the club of the select few.

Grey Piggy pulled a coin out of her backpack and announced her verdict: "At each moment of the upcoming choice, we will take turns tossing this coin. Firstly, which pair of animals will choose first, secondly, which animal will choose another male or female to be its mate, thirdly..."

Suddenly it started to rain, which was not in the forecast, so it was decided to continue the conversation later.

Four quadrupeds coming out of the forest thought about the same thing in very different ways, whereas they enter adulthood.

At evening Red Wolf sent a message to the boss: "Case #15DL, let chance decide everything, because changing partners, their roles, and identities in the experiment."

After a minute the answer appeared on the screen and quickly disappeared: "OK, proceed according to plan #24, select sub-option #132, activate data processing algorithm #0771."