The Dogma of Infant Baptism

There is no support for infant-baptism in the Scripture. There is no express command for infants to be baptized until they become responsible agents and turn to God and have their sins remitted as in the case of adults. There is no case of baptism of infants in the Scriptures. No passage even implies such a practice. Salvation is a personal experience and children must become old enough to accept salvation before they are commanded to be baptized. Some theologians believe, "Children under the age of accountability are saved (Matthew 18:1-10; Matthew 19:14). Exact accountable age is not known." Until they become responsible, even though their parents are unsaved, will be taken to Heaven if they die before accountability just as much as those of saved parents. Scriptures demand faith and repentance as necessary before baptism and this no child can do until he is old enough to understand sin and what to do to be saved.

Infant baptism became prominent when churches began to teach baptism and other sacraments to save the soul and remit sins. Such practice makes it impossible to obey Christ's command later without admitting infant-baptism was of no benefit. Since there are so many scriptural reasons why infant-baptism should not be practiced and since it has no efficacy it would be best to wait until the child turns to God by faith and repents of its sins before it is baptized in water.
