JOHNSON CITY, TN (WJHL)-- Allied solutions held a special ribbon cutting ceremony this afternoon in Johnson city-- to mark the transformation of the company from its initial 100 employees to the growing roster of over 500 employees.

It was also a special celebration as 2 mini coopers were given away to employees- one earned the title of employee of the year and the other was selected from a random drawing.

Allied announced last month that it would be opening a headquarters in downtown Johnson city-- adding jobs to northeast Tennessee. Commissioner of Economic Development for the state of Tennessee, Randy Boyd, stated that this is "just an incredible entrepreneur story. It shows that anybody can start any business in Johnson City and this part of Tennessee".

Commissioner Boyd said the most incredible thing about the whole story is that this company is only one year old and they're having such great success. The company of 100 employees plans to add 481 additional jobs.
