Normalizing Antisemitism

Dear Friends,

It is clear that violent rhetoric and attacks against Jews are growing significantly since the October 7 massacre. From Colorado Springs to London and from Melbourne to NYC, the line between protest and provocation grows thinner, and the cost of normalized hatred is becoming harder to ignore.

A dangerous worldwide trend is becoming more virulent: the escalating normalization of rhetoric that directly incites violence against Jews, Zionists, and Israelis. In NYC, mayoral candidate Zohran Mamdani repeatedly refused to condemn the chilling slogan “Globalize the Intifada.” During the Second Intifada – launched by Palestinian Authority President Yasser Arafat in 2000 – Palestinian terrorists attacked Israeli busses, restaurants, and other targets, killing more than 1,000 Israelis.

When NYC voters were asked: “Mamdani backs the Boycott, Divestment and Sanctions Movement against Israel and also refuses to condemn the phrase ‘Globalize the Intifada,’ which some interpret as a call to violence against Jews, does knowing this make you more or less likely to vote for Mamdani?” While a slight majority responded that they were less likely to vote for him, 31% were more likely to support Mamdani. This number rises to 46% among 18- to- 44-year-olds.

The latest arson attack against Jewish worshippers in a synagogue struck Australia – again. The attacker poured and lit flammable liquid on front doors – the second firebombing in Melbourne in seven months. The 20 worshippers inside for a Shabbat meal were unharmed. There have been a number of firebombing attacks on synagogues during the past few years, including in America, Armenia, Canada, France, Germany, Poland, Tunisia, and Ukraine.

About a mile away from the Melbourne synagogue that was attacked and burned, anti-Israel protesters stormed an Israeli restaurant. About 20 individuals chanted, “Death, death to the IDF” – echoing the calls from the lead singer of the Bob Vylan band from the prior week’s UK music festival – and threw chairs and knocked over tables, terrifying diners.

Zionist Federation of Australia President Jeremy Leibler responded: “We’re starting to see outright calls for the death and murder of Jews become normalized on Melbourne’s streets. There has been a transition from coded slogans like ‘From the river to the sea’ and ‘Globalize the intifada’ to explicit incitement with the chant ‘Death to the IDF.’ Executive Council of Australian Jewry co-CEO Alex Ryvchin added: “Those who chant for death are not peace activists. Those who would burn houses of prayer with families inside do not seek an end to war.”

From American university campuses to Australian streets, chants once confined to the fringe now echo through mainstream politics and protests. Chants of “Globalize the Intifada” and “Death to the IDF” are not slogans of peace. They are pure incitement and blur the line between speech and violence—we have already seen where this leads. When leaders such as politicians, entertainers, influencers, activists, and university presidents refuse to condemn these words – or worse, promote them – they encourage those willing to act on them.

At every Passover Seder, Jews recite: “Next year in Jerusalem.” For most Jews, Israel’s existence is not a political debate: It is part of their Jewish identity, memory, history and survival. Chanting for its destruction is not just a policy critique. It erases a people’s culture, history, and right to exist in their ancient homeland. When anti-Zionism veers into the denial of Jewish identity, it becomes something even more dangerous. Jewish pride should not come with fear – and Jewish existence is not up for negotiation.

Am Yisrael Chai
