Re: It's Time for Congress to Reclaim Its Authority and End the Harmful Tariffs on Canada

Dear Representative [Last Name],

I am writing as a concerned constituent to urge you to support the bipartisan Senate resolution to end the tariffs on Canadian imports. This is not a partisan issue—it is a constitutional and economic one. The Senate has done its job. Now it is time for the House to act.

These tariffs, initially imposed by the Trump administration under the guise of national security, are nothing more than an unjustified tax on American consumers and businesses. They are harming industries across the country—from manufacturing to agriculture—and threatening local jobs that depend on strong cross-border supply chains.

The Senate passed the resolution on April 2, 2025, with support from both Democrats and Republicans, including Senators Collins, Murkowski, McConnell, and Paul. They recognized what many Americans already know: Congress must take back the power to regulate trade. The Constitution gives Congress—not the executive—the authority to impose tariffs. Abdicating that responsibility has allowed harmful, politically motivated trade decisions to go unchecked.

The administration's justification for these tariffs—blaming Canada for fentanyl trafficking—is not only unsupported by facts, it is dangerously misleading. The majority of fentanyl enters through the southern border, not from our closest ally to the north. Using a public health crisis as cover for economic retaliation against a key partner is unacceptable.

I urge you to stand up for American workers, our constitutional balance of powers, and the rule of law. Support the resolution to end these tariffs and return trade policy to where it belongs: in the hands of the legislative branch. Failing to act is a failure to lead.

Sincerely,
