WHAT'S AN OATMEAL STOUT?

An oatmeal stout is a sweeter and more silky cousin to the familiar Irish stout. Traditionally made up of only around 5% oats, the addition of the oats actually is what gives the stout it's well-known smooth and rich body.

Our oatmeal stout was actually the first beer that we ever brewed here at Wild Rover! We are very excited to be bringing it back this season and sharing this sweet stout with you.

Typically oatmeal stouts only incorporate a small percentage of oats into the mix in order to avoid problems in the brewing process. However, our oatmeal stout goes against the grain as our mix contains about 30% oats. We use a combination of both malted and flaked oats. This combination creates a balance between sweetness and silkiness. Oatmeal stouts tend to be sweeter than most stouts but not because of the oats. The sweetness comes from the malts and strain of yeast used- both of which don't consume too much of the sugars. Since we use such a high volume of oats in our brew, the malted and flaked oats each serve a different job. The malted oats help to give the mix more sugar while the flaked oats give the mix its silky body.

In color and taste, Oatshined, is reminiscent of both a dark brown ale and an Irish stout. The influence of these different beer styles and roasted malt character offers this stout its caramel and chocolate-like flavor profile. Be sure to grab a pint for yourself and get a taste of our smooth, velvety, and creamy oatmeal stout.
