BEER HIGHLIGHT

STAIRWAY TO HEFE'N HEFEWEIZEN

6.2%

Pouring a cloudy, golden color, Stairway to Hefe'n is the perfect beer to send off summer and welcome in those cozy, relaxed fall flavors.

having soft banana notes. This time around, a new yeast was used in the mix, slightly altering the taste. Our Hefeweizen breaks from the German beer mold, showcasing a yeast-driven fruit and spice which makes for a striking beer experience. You'll find it now leans more to a citrus and clove flavor profile.

Though most Hefeweizen is highly carbonated with a thick-foamy head, due to brewer's preference we opted for lighter carbonation. Less carbonation, actually, helps to bring boldness to the more subtle flavors hidden in the beer.

After a long-awaited return, Stairway to Hefe'n is now back on tap- just in time for the fall season! Like any Hefeweizen, Stairway to Hefe'n is brewed using a combination of barley malts and wheat, with wheat making up 60% of this beer.

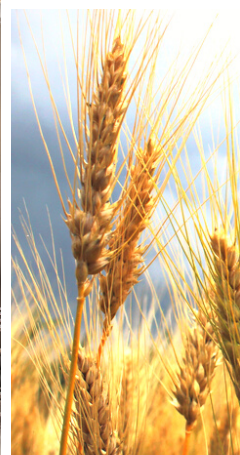

Craft beers are typically brewed using malted barley. Why?

Because barley malts are the easiest to brew with and wheat beers are already exceptionally difficult to make. Because of the proteins and starches in the grain wanting to bind together, it makes it trickier to extract the sugars when using wheat.

What gives Hefeweizen's their distinct flavor is actually not the wheat but the yeast used when brewing. Last time Stairway was on tap, you may remember it

WHAT'S A HEFEWEIZEN?

In German "Hefe" refers to the yeast which remains in suspension giving the German beer its cloudy appearance, and "weizen" denotes the use of wheat. A wheat beer is really any beer where a substantial portion (>50%) of the grain used in brewing is wheat.
