PARTS OF THE LITURGY: THE CREEDS

We've been discussing the parts of our liturgy for the past few months. Today, we focus on the Creeds. While not essential for our weekly worship, we recite them regularly as simple explanations of faith for teaching apologetics. Luther expounded on the Creed's place in Christian life in his catechisms, remarking that they are one of the six chief parts of the faith. We emphasize the Creed's importance, citing at least five points.

We believe the Creed helps us understand God's expectations and our response through obedience to the Ten Commandments.

The Creeds, especially the Nicene and Apostles' Creeds, are divided into articles corresponding to the Holy Trinity (Father, Son, and Holy Ghost). This structure organizes beliefs related to Creation, Redemption, and Sanctification, building a foundation for understanding our relationship with God.

We appreciate the Creeds' simplicity and clarity, making them accessible to new believers and those less educated. This broad understanding ensures core beliefs are comprehensible and deeply ingrained.

The Creeds complement the study of the Scriptures. They summarize biblical truths but encourage further exploration into Scripture to deepen knowledge and apply teachings in daily life. While helpful for basics, the Creeds are not extensive. The power lies in the Word, but the Creeds help navigate it.

For Christians, engaging with the Creeds is a lifelong journey. As Martin Luther suggested, even after learning their substance, believers are encouraged to seek more profound understanding through continued study and reflection on the Scriptures.

In summary, we consider the Creeds essential teachings that clarify God's will, our response, and Christian beliefs. They bridge Scripture and practical living, grounding Christians in faith while inspiring deeper knowledge.

In Christ,
Nathan Misch - Pastor, St. Paul Lutheran Church
