WHY PROFESSORS?

Reaching university faculty is difficult and has many challenges. So why do it? Here's why . . .

THREE REASONS FOR REACHING FACULTY

It is true that reaching out to professors is challenging. But one of the things that compels us is that they need Jesus too. A faculty friend in Orlando said to Jenny, "There are a dozen Christian groups reaching out to students on this campus, but no one is trying to reach professors and staff. Thank you so much for being here."

A second important reason to reach professors is that it is strategic. Think of how many students just one professor influences over a career of teaching. Semester after semester each instructor imparts not just information but also a world view. All the more reason to seek to influence a faculty member's thinking with the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Finally, taking the initiative to reach professors honors God. As Christian believers, we must never abdicate our responsibility to see that the gospel has a voice even in the academy. By engaging with non-Christian faculty we remind them that there is a god above to whom every person is accountable.

Thank you for standing with us in this exciting adventure. Your partnership enables us to encourage and engage an important audience.

NOW AFTER FOUR MONTHS HOW IS THE MOVE GOING?

We're embedded with a great team of Cru co-workers.

In the picture above you can see most of the field staff here in Indianapolis. These workers are reaching high school students, undergrads, grad students, athletes, faculty and people in the marketplace. It's now fall break time and our team has just had about 180 students attend the fall retreat. We have also met several good and godly faculty. Along with several other campus ministries, they have begun to plan an apologetics conference for the spring.
