Dobričić

Dobričić (doh-bree-cheech) is a rare, winegrape cultivar native to the Dalmatian coast of Croatia. It is believed that it originated on Šolta Island, where it is still primarily cultivated, along with limited amounts on two neighboring Islands.

Dobričić has an interesting genetic relationship with other important wine varieties. Plavac Mali, Croatia's most widely planted and highly regarded wine grape, was produced from a natural cross of Dobričić and Crljenak Kaštelanski. Crljenak Kaštelanski (Tribidrag) is what we call Zinfandel in North America.

Dobričić is naturally very high in both color and tannin. However, we make the wine in a more refined style. Our wine, like the Dobričić made in Croatia, is a medium-bodied red, at only 12.5 % alcohol. It has the aromas of hibiscus tea and plums, a cherry flavor, and a thread of fine tannin running well into the finish. This is a new vintage; not yet on any store shelves.
