“Ká-Le” Malvasia Bianca

So ancient and so widely planted, the Malvasia Bianca grape has become disguised worldwide with many localized names and wine styles. The malvasia family of winegrapes have a long and storied history in Italy. Between the years 1300 and 1600, malvasia held the reputation of being Europe’s most famous wine. Take a stroll through Venice and you will encounter numerous streets and bridges that include malvasia in their name. Malvasia’s captivating aromatic quality is easy to love, as it jumps out of the glass with tropical fruit and floral tones.

Our Malvasia comes from a vineyard near the confluence of Dry Creek and the Russian River just south of Healdsburg. This spot is the intersection of the three principal viticultural regions of northern Sonoma County.

Ká-Le is the historic name of the Pomo people’s village located at what is now Healdsburg’s plaza. The local winemaking community respects and appreciates the treasured diversity of this area.
