From the President – Mark Kubancik

What a great show! Several KYANA members and I just attended the AACA Central Fall Nationals in East Moline, IL. The Mississippi Valley Region based in the Quad Cities hosted a great show with the Saturday car show inside a new air-conditioned building. Sound at all familiar? Fred Trusty earned a Senior award with his '77 Cadillac Coupe de Ville and I earned an HPOF original badge for my '86 Pontiac Parisienne. At judges' breakfast on show day Jeff Brown received his judging award for 10 judging credits. Congratulations Jeff!

Last month I shared how we were contacted by a local church needing a car to display in their atrium. Jane Burke was kind enough to loan her '65 Mustang for a month-long display. Along the same vein, I was contacted several months ago by a lady involved with a meeting taking place in Louisville. She had found KYANA on the internet and was seeking a late '20's/early '30's car for a photo opportunity. The meeting topic was an obscure (to me!) TV series titled "Miss Fisher's Murder Mysteries". Seems that the heroine of the show tools around in a classic Hispano Suiza car. The organizers of this meeting hoped to have a car from the same era to park at the Seelbach Hilton for an hour or so as a photo backdrop. The date of the event was the Friday of Street Rod Nationals, narrowing the possible suspects (murder myster lingo!). Undeterred, I reached out to Richard Alford and asked if he would consider driving his '32 Buick sedan to the Seelbach. Without hesitation, Richard said "sure". While Richard's Buick looks all original from the outside, it carries modern Camaro running gear making it the perfect car for a trip downtown.

The day came and I rode downtown with Richard and Norene in the Buick. Shortly after we arrived at the Seelbach, out come the meeting attendees dressed in their period costumes and regalia. They were overjoyed at having Richard's Buick to use as a photo backdrop and were very generous in their gratitude to Richard and Norene. Pretty sure the Alford's had as much fun as the meeting attendees! People are finding us on the web, not only to join but for these sort of fun activities. If you have not visited the KYANA Region website lately, have a look. We have been uploading event photos for just about every recent event. If you were unable to attend, you can still see what took place. Our website address is on the front page of The Sidelight.

September and October usually provide great weather for local car shows and events. Check out this month's Sidelight for a host of upcoming opportunities to have fun with your cars and fellow members.

KEENLAND CONCOURS D'ELEGANCE CAR SHOW

These are a few of the cars we saw at the Keeneland Concours d'Elegance event in July. From the Concours website: "Each year we have fantastic support from our regional Car Clubs. These dedicated owners come out to support their club and the Keeneland Concours d'Elegance." The UK Children's Hospital was the beneficiary of their charity this year.

There were 200 cars at the event, ranging from early 20th century cars to modern Porsches and Corvettes. Prominent were two Corvette and two Porsche clubs.

We look forward to a big KYANA involvement in this event in July, 2023!

THE LEXINGTON

Kentucky & Indiana built car: 1908 - 1927

Steven Lippmann      August 2022

Vehicles have been and are made in Kentucky. Nowadays, there are Louisville Fords, Corvettes from Bowling Green, and Toyotas of Georgetown. Lots of automobile parts are also made in various Kentucky locations. Indiana also was and still is a significant vehicle manufacturing state.

What about cars built in Kentucky early in the 20th century? That included Louisville's Dixie Flyer, the Firefly Speedster, and the Urban Electric tractor. Between 1912 and 1923, these were products of the Kentucky Wagon Manufacturing Company of Louisville. Some of us have knowledge about these three products. By appointment, one can still view a Dixie Flyer, on exhibit at the Kentucky Tractor Company in Louisville. During 1912, another company planned to produce a car, the Kentucky Electric; however, none were built. Were there any others?

The Lexington was an early four-cylinder car initially produced in Lexington, Kentucky by the Lexington Motor Company. They were an "assembly vehicle," put together with parts from many different sources. Lexingtons were built there between 1908 and 1910. The original intent of the owners, who had been horse-racing enthusiasts, was to enter competitive automotive racing. Subsequently, however, fabrication moved to Connersville, Indiana in 1910. Not doing well financially, the company nearly collapsed in 1912, 1923, and 1926, but was twice rescued by added monetary backing.

One early financial supporter for Lexington automobiles in 1913 was the Ansted family-owned United States Automotive Corporation. Ansted assembled Howard engines, and they powered Lexington. The company made a potentially lucrative deal with General Motors, contracting to produce a high volume of six-cylinder Ansted engines for GM's Durrant and Princeton automobiles. GM ordered 30,000 of these engines, but some patent infringement questions dampened enthusiasm. It was a great idea, but too late for the Lexington Motor Company, partly because of a countrywide recession with diminished car sales in the 1920s. The Ansted family diversified into other ventures. Decades later, one of the members acquired a fast race-car, winning the Indianapolis 500 two times in the mid-1960s, scored by A.J. Foyt, the famous auto racing driver.

One Lexington innovation in 1919 was a dual exhaust system for each cylinder; that boosted power and gasoline mileage. Other engineering improvements included a rigid box cross-section frame for strengthening the undercarriage. The emergency brake operated on the driveshaft rather than on the wheels. Vehicles were produced in a wide variety of styles that included roundabouts, roadsters, touring cars, limousines, coupes, sedans, and sedanettes, many with a variety of seating capacities.

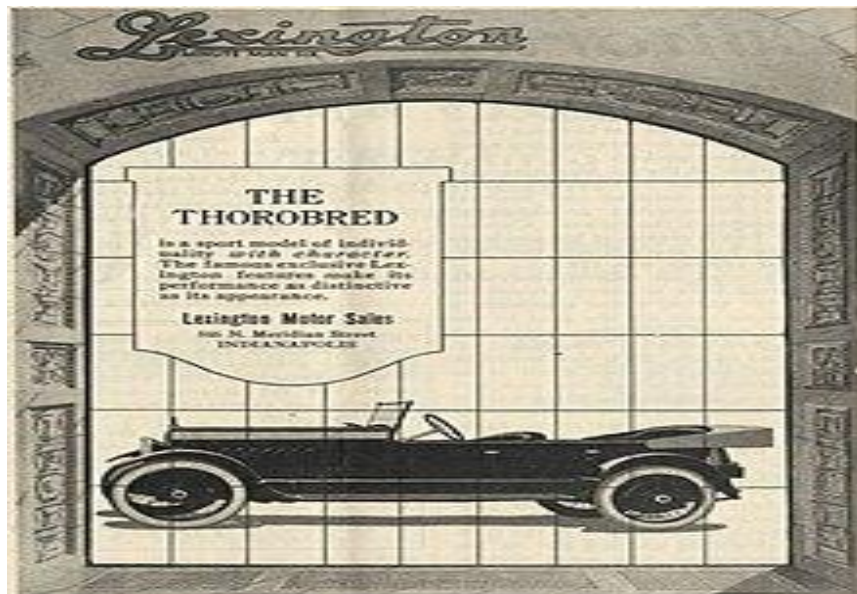

Lexington's racing niche had success in 1909 and 1910 by winning the Glidden, multi-thousand-mile endurance tour and the Indianapolis 500 in 1912. Some prestige came by winning the Colorado Pikes Peak mountain-climbing race three times between 1920 and 1924. Yet, these victories never translated into high sales; the Lexington brand never achieved a wide-spread reputation. It was not a prestige automobile, nor a real performance car, or even just a fast, reliable vehicle for the public. This issue was reflected in the manufacturing. Performance options favored hill climbing and racing; however, the body styles were less popular. At the company's peak they operated 10 factories, and they were recognized for joining many different parts into a finished automobile. There had been interest in expanding the company, but competition remained a problem.

The aftermath of a recession following World War I led to the demise of many automobile companies. Lexington in its first year fabricated under 200 cars, but they gradually escalated to an annual peak of over 6,000 during the 1920s. Production subsequently declined to well below 200 units in a year; that small number was economically unsustainable. They never achieved enough volume, having captured just a small automotive following. The last financial shortfall led to the end of the company; the manufacture of the Lexington ceased in 1927.

That same year, E.L. Cord, of Indiana's Auburn Automobile Company, purchased the Ansted Engine Company and the Lexington Motor Car Company. Then, $2 million was invested in upgrading their factories ultimately into state-of-the-art Auburn, Cord, and Duesenberg manufacturing plants.

For those wanting to know more about the Lexington, there is a book: the Lexington Automobile, A Complete History. It is authored by Richard A. Stanley and published in 2007 by McFarland and Company, Inc. (ISBN-13: 978-0786469345). This publication also contains numerous photos, old-time advertisements, drawings, and maps.
