ALLIED HEALTH

Seeing an Allied Health Professional is a better health channel

Allied health is a term used to describe a broad range of professionals that work with doctors and nurses to provide the best patient outcomes.

Allied health practitioners greatly influence your health care delivery. A team of allied health professionals provides essential services that promote health, prevent disease and manage pain. They play a critical role in improving access and quality health care to patients and they are often the first discipline to identify a problem and take the next steps for medical management.

PAIN CARE

Experiences from the First StimRouter Implanted in Patients in Canada

As a shadowing medical student in family medicine clinics in Toronto, I'd seen patients with chronic pain of a neurogenic origin and always felt heartbroken. I'd looked on in helplessness as we consoled the patients and offered them physiotherapy, bedrest, and pain killers. We and the patients knew none of these options were curative, and subsequently tiptoed around that subject.

Fortunately, Health Canada approved a new solution earlier this year: a peripheral nerve stimulator called the Bioness StimRouter. It's a minimally invasive neuromodulation device consisting of an implanted lead, an external pulse generator, and a hand-held wireless programmer. It uses programmed electrical pulses to stimulate an erratic peripheral nerve and retrains the brain to perceive sensations as non-painful. It's excitingly the first peripheral nerve stimulator to be approved in Canada that offers a curative solution.

INVOLVED MEDICINE

Our involved, integrated approach responds to the ever growing need for a timely, comprehensive health care solution that is patient centric.

We know that by closing the gaps in the current medical system which is burdened with long wait times, rushed appointments and lack of integration, we can help with and enhance, our patient's treatment, quality of life and approach to wellness, by dedicating the time and attention every person wants and deserves but also influencing the value-based proposition in health care systems. We are leading the next generation strategy for valued-based care because at our core we believe in fixing gaps in health care for persons with chronic illnesses.

A study looking at opioid-related deaths in Colorado saw these fatalities drop as a result of recreational cannabis legalization in the state.

New research published last week in the American Journal of Public Health revealed that the legalization of recreational cannabis in Colorado resulted in a reversal of opioid-related deaths by 6.5 percent.
