

SUMMONING VOID ENTITIES

A BRIEF OVERVIEW

The Void has never lacked inhabitants. It has only lacked consistent documentation.

The entities collected in this brief overview represent a small selection of those most frequently encountered during standard operations beyond the Threshold. Their names, diagrams, and classifications have been reproduced from accepted arcane sources and simplified where possible for ease of reference. Readers should remember that individual manifestations may vary according to local conditions, ritual quality, and prevailing cosmological pressure.

This booklet is intended as a practical field reference rather than a comprehensive taxonomy. It assumes familiarity with conventional summoning procedures, dimensional orientation, and the pronunciation of non-Euclidean true names. Those lacking such preparation are advised to consult more foundational texts before proceeding.

Minor inconsistencies between observed and recorded manifestations should not be interpreted as errors. They are generally indicative of satisfactory contact.

IMPORTANT NOTICE

The summoning of Void Entities should only be attempted by spellcasters possessing advanced knowledge of arcane mathematics, dimensional cartography, and post-corporeal linguistics.

The publisher assumes no responsibility for:

- Temporal inversion
- Unauthorized duplication of limbs
- Recursive memories
- Localized reality collapse
- Replacement by alternate selves
- Persistent humming

If at any point the text appears to read itself, discontinue use immediately.

NUL-GORATH

Classification: Void Entity, Type II

Common Name: The Empty Surveyor

Among the various entities catalogued by the Commonwealth Committee for Peripheral Phenomena, Nul-Gorath remains one of the most frequently reported and least satisfactorily understood examples of the Type II Void Entity class. Although no complete physical description has yet achieved general acceptance, field observations collected between 1937 and 1944 display a remarkable consistency regarding the conditions under which the entity is liable to appear.

Nul-Gorath is most commonly encountered in the vicinity of abandoned stairwells, disused access passages, and locations associated with unfinished conversations. Investigators are advised that the latter category is considerably broader than might at first be supposed, and may include deserted railway platforms, vacant waiting rooms, interrupted correspondence, and domestic dining tables at which a significant topic was permanently deferred.

The approach of the entity is generally preceded by several recognisable indicators. The first is a sudden and often distressing awareness of forgotten birthdays, anniversaries, and similar neglected obligations. Witnesses frequently report the spontaneous recollection of names not consciously remembered for many years. This phase is ordinarily followed by the appearance of a faint metallic odour for which no local source can be identified. Descriptions vary, though comparisons to iron filings, old coins, or rain upon rusted roofing are common.

A third and particularly reliable warning sign is the perception of additional horizons. These horizons may appear indoors or outdoors and need not correspond to any actual geographical feature. Reports suggest they are most often glimpsed in peripheral vision and vanish immediately upon direct inspection.

Direct negotiation with Nul-Gorath is strongly discouraged. While the entity is capable of coherent exchange and may display an apparent willingness to bargain, available records indicate that it rarely acknowledges agreements established prior to its arrival. Contracts, promises, understandings, and verbal arrangements made in anticipation of contact are generally treated as void, irrelevant, or, in several documented cases, as evidence that the observer has misunderstood the nature of the discussion entirely.

For this reason, personnel encountering Nul-Gorath are instructed to maintain observational discipline, avoid speculative commitments, and record all statements as precisely as circumstances permit. Withdrawal is preferable to argument. Experience has repeatedly demonstrated that an observer may leave a conversation with Nul-Gorath believing an agreement has been reached, only to discover later that the terms, the subject, and occasionally the participants themselves have undergone substantial revision.

Image reprinted from Principles of Etheric Physics and Psychical Phenomena: A Scientific Survey for Advanced Students

